PRINCESS'.—A burlesque, by Mr. W. Brough, on "The Mountain Sylph," is here the piece of the season. It is entitled "The Sylphide;" in which character Miss C. Leclercq appears, the part of Donald, her lover, being exquisitely supported by Miss Louise Keeley. The incidents are helped out by a parody on the witch scenes in "Macbeth." Mr. Shore's Hela serves as an exaggeration of Hecate. The spectacle throughout is picturesque, and the groupings and dancings exceedingly graceful. The new piece was preceded by a revival of Macklin's "Man of the World," Mr. Phelps, who has a starring engagement here, supporting and most ably interpreting the part of Sir Pertinax Macsycophant. This is, perhaps, the best of Mr. Phelps's comic rôles, and deservedly excited the unmistakable enthusiasm of the audience. It is, indeed, a powerful piece of acting. The Scotch heroine was cleverly and spiritedly played by Miss Atkinson, who has been transferred from the Sadler's Wells stage to support her manager in this and other parts. Their endeavours on the present occasion were most successful; and we think there is every probability that the experiment will serve the interest of Mr. A. Harris, the Oxford-street lessee.

LYCEUM.—This theatre has been reopened for a limited period with the performance of the seven-authored burlesque of "The Forty Thieves, performed, not by its writers, as on the evening of its Savage Club production, but by such regular histrions as Miss Lydia Thompson, Miss Clara St. Casse, Miss Kate Saxon, Mr. Tilbury, Mr. Emery, and Mr. S. Calhaem. Suffice it to add that the performance goes off with immense effect. A small piece, entitled "Next of Kin," succeeded; and the entertainments concluded with "The Middy Ashore."

STRAND.—A new burlesque, by Mr. F. Talfourd and Mr. H. J. Byron in conjunction, stuffed to repletion with pun and parody, signalises the Easter season at this house. It is entitled "The Miller and his Men," Grindorff, the chief robber, being performed by that inimitable droll Miss Saunders, who is admirably assisted by Mr. James Rogers, in Ravina. The caricature is broad and telling, and the whole extorts from the audience uproarious approbation.

NEW ADELPHI.—Mr. Webster has opened his season with two revivals—"The Dead Heart" and "The Fair One with the Golden Locks." The house was quite full, and Mr. Webster made his usual deep impression; while Mr. Planché's piece, like a true classic, showed fresh as ever. The scenic accessories bestowed upon it are brilliant and appropriate.

ST. JAMES'S.—The burlesque at this house is from the pen of Mr. Leicester Buckingham, entitled "Lucrezia Borgia, at Home and All Abroad." The points of the opera are adroitly taken up, and applied without vulgarity. Lucrezia is a speculator in the stocks, represented with great force by Mr. Charles Young; his friend Gennaro, a paragraph-writing shopkeeper, being excellently interpreted by Miss Wyndham. A new piece, by Mr. Howard Paul, was also produced on Monday, entitled "A Change of System," in which Mr. Robinson, late of Sadler's Wells, Mr. George Spencer, and Miss Murray acted with spirit and cleverness. Besides these, the entertainments consist of "A Border Marriage" and the farce of "Number Forty-nine."

STANDARD.—On Monday a new piece was produced, with costly accessories and much fine scenery, founded on, and named after, the opera of "Dinorah." Mr. W. Travers, the author, has adapted the story with great skill, introducing it, however, with a prologue-act, which serves to render the madness of the heroine more probable. The part was powerfully supported by Mrs. R. Honner; that of her lover, Fernand Hoel, being sustained by Mr. Rayner.

ASTLEY'S.—A new piece, in four acts and eleven tableaux, was produced on Easter Monday, taken from the French drama "L'Histoire d'un Drapeau," and called "The History of a Flag." It is splendidly put on the stage, the battle of Arcole being represented with artillery, cavalry, and infantry; and the deeds of the French arms in Egypt being illustrated with some beautiful and appropriate scenery. There is also an Oriental ballet contrived with skill and executed with spirit, with an interesting pas de deux, in which Mdlle. Martinez and Miss Seaman figured to advantage. Nor is this all; for then comes the invasion of Russia, and the retreat from Moscow, admirably pictured by Messrs. Cuthbert, Dayes, Herbert, and Thorne, assisted by no less picturesque stage groupings. The whole concludes with Bonaparte's return from Elba and his enthusiastic reception at Grenoble. The scenes in the circle manifested the usual variety and excellence.

The OLYMPIC has been fortunately able to do without any change of performance, and reopened with "Tom Noddy's Secret," "Uncle Zachary," and "B. B."

On Thursday week Mr. Ryder read "Macbeth" to a large and respectable audience at the Hanover-square Rooms. He accompanied his reading, which was exceedingly judicious, with some running criticism that rendered it instructive. The more declamatory portions of the play were delivered with emphasis and force that merited and gained much applause.

The COLOSSEUM was crowded on Easter Monday, when a new set of entertainments was provided, and received with public approbation. MADAME TUSSAUD'S, also, proved, as usual, one of the most attractive exhibitions to the holiday-folk. BURFORD'S PANORAMA presents new and excellent views—those of Venice, Canton, and the Rigi Kulm. The first is really a splendid production, which should be witnessed by all who appreciate the pictorial art. The GREAT GLOBE still attracts the scientific, and has been numerously visited during the week. At SADLER'S WELLS, next Tuesday, Mr. and Mrs. Marston announce that their benefit will take place, on which occasion Mrs. Charles Young is engaged to play neighbour Constance in "The Love Chase," Mrs. Marston, of course, supporting the Widow Green, as also Mrs. Sternholt in "Still Waters Run Deep." The bill is an attractive one. At MYDDELTON HALL, on Monday and Tuesday, Mr. Woodin gave his entertainment to the Islingtonians. Having approached the metropolis so near, we may soon expect his advent in London at his old quarters.

The Rubicon is now, by a curious coincidence, the boundary at Rimini between the King of Sardinia's enlarged kingdom and the remnant of the dominions of the Holy See.

The Greenock Advertiser describes a new mode of propulsion which has been applied to a steam-yacht on the Clyde. The screw, which is three-bladed, is fitted at the bow, and the vessel is dragged forward instead of being propelled from abaft, as in the ordinary mode.

The police authorities have received information of a great robbery of precious stones having been perpetrated in Paris. Amongst the gems stolen were 1000 carats of diamonds; also rubies, opals, emeralds, &c.

Colonel Tomline, M.P., is about to place a barometer near the fishing-dock at Grimsby, for the use of the fishermen frequenting the port. It is to stand on a granite pedestal and pillar about seven feet high, surmounted by a sun-dial. The barometer is calculated to give an indication of the weather twenty-four hours beforehand.

OFFICIAL INQUIRY INTO THE STATE OF THE GENERAL POST OFFICE.—In consequence of the statements recently made public through the Times as to the inefficient working of the circulation department of the General Post Office, a Commission has been appointed to inquire into the facts of the case. The Commissioners are daily engaged, during the hours of duty at the chief department in St. Martin's-le-Grand, in collecting information by personal inspection and by association with the officers, the whole of whom have been invited to furnish information.

THE "GREAT EASTERN."—The Times, in an article on the Great Eastern, says:—"A failure was predicted which would involve as total a loss to all concerned as that which has overtaken the shareholders in the unfortunate Atlantic Telegraph. For these extreme opinions, we are glad to say, no real foundation exists. According to present arrangements she is expected to be ready by the beginning of June to accompany the squadron which takes the Prince of Wales to Canada. She will, however, it is said, most probably call at Queenstown for a day before beginning her run to Portland."

A superior officer in the French army, who lived in the Rue Moreau, St. Denis, committed suicide the other day by lying on his back in bed and discharging a musket beneath his chin, by pulling the trigger by means of a string attached to his foot. In a letter addressed to the Colonel of his regiment, he stated that his reason was that he had long suffered so dreadfully from wounds—not fewer than twenty-five in number, received in action—that at times his mind was affected. Just before killing himself he sent his wife and child to Paris.

JUVENILE THIEVES IN PARIS.—The Tribunal of Correctional Police in Paris on Saturday last tried a band of ten boys, aged from eleven to sixteen, for committing numerous thefts of poultry, fish, game, pastry, shoes, and other articles exposed for sale at shop doors or in the markets. From a paper drawn up by one of the accused, which was siezed, it appears that the prisoners called themselves by the somewhat ambitious title of "La band à passe-partout." It appears that the band had a captain, lieutenant, sergeant, and corporal; likewise that every member of it bore a nickname, such as "Saucepan," "Radish," "Grey Cow," "My Aunt," "Turnip," and so on. One of the gang was alleged to have committed as many as thirty-four thefts, another twenty-eight, another twenty-four, and the others from nineteen down to two. The trial ended in one boy, the eldest, being condemned to a year's imprisonment; six being ordered to be detained in a house of correction—three until they should be eighteen, and three until they should be twenty years of age; the three others being acquitted. The parents of the boys were besides condemned to pay the costs of the case.

THE FARM.

SAVE and except in two or three specimens out of the 379 beasts, 88 sheep, and 56 pigs, which assembled to do battle this week at the spring show of the Royal Dublin Society, "the fodder-famine" received no illustration. As a whole, the show was a very good one, and as fashionably attended as ever. The yearling shorthorn-bull class, which has ever been the great feature of it, mustered 120 strong; and of these sixteen were ordered out for inspection by the judges, Messrs. A. Maynard, Stratton, and Allwood, after they had taken their preliminary survey. The shorthorn bulls in all the classes were beyond the average of other years; while the shorthorn females, both in quantity and excellence, fell rather below it. Devons and Herefords were but slightly represented; and the efforts to introduce them into Ireland have, so far, not been successful. There were some good specimens of Kerries, Ayrshires, and Alderneys; and of the crossbreeds nothing struck our fancy more than a clever little miniature ox between a small Devon and a Kerry; while those especially curious in such matters had food for discussion over a half-Brahmin half-Kerry bull which had come from the Earl of Clancarty's in company with two pure-bred Brahmins.

The yearling shorthorn bull-prize was awarded to Soubadar, by Prince of Warlaby from a Baron Warlaby cow, the property of Mr. Jonathan Richardson, of Glenmore; and right well he deserved his honours. The Ganly Cup was awarded to him as the second best bull in the yard, and it was whispered that one of the judges preferred him to "The Doctor." In point of age he had a good pull over the second—a remarkably level-fed, nice animal, belonging to Mr. Crosbie, and a grandson of Mr. Douglas's Lamp of Lothian. All the three first prizes stayed in Ireland, Mr. Richardson being also third with another of Prince of Warlaby's stock. Leviathan, of Mr. Fawkes's breeding, and lately sold into that country for 200gs., was the reserved fourth; and Mr. Challoner's Shamrock by Sir Samuel, Mr. Marjoribanks's Young Mogul by Great Mogul, and Mr. Owen's Sir Hercules by a son of Baron of Southwick, were also highly commended. The commended ones only numbered two. We did not hear of many purchasers on Tuesday. The bull Soubadar was bought by Mr. Coppinger, a veteran breeder of shorthorns, from the county of Cork, for 200 guineas—the same price, if our memory serves us, that the late Marquis of Waterford gave Mr. Challoner for his victorious Field Marshal in 1856. In the two-year-old bull class Ireland had it all its own way again, Lord Talbot de Malahide winning the head prize with his Clydesdale, an own brother to Sir Colin, and considered by many to be superior to him. He is by Mr. Barnes's Emperor from Corn Cup by Vanguard, who exchanged her native Aylesbury pastures for Tynte Park a few years ago. The counties of Down and Tyrone furnished the second and third, and the only h. c. fell to the lot of an English bull from Bedale. The great interest of the show, however, centred on the meeting of Mr. Barnes's Dr. M'Hale and his Dundalk victor of last year, Sir Colin, in the three-year-old class; and beforehand it was difficult to say whose regiment of partisans was the largest. The meeting of the pair had almost risen to the dignity of a national question, and long and hot had been the debates thereon. It now seemed a struggle of level and graceful grandeur against robust thickness of flesh. The judges very soon settled the matter, and "The Doctor" not only put his old rival to rout, but swept the gold medal as the best bull in the yard, with the Farmer's Gazette Cup and Railway Cup as well, thus beating every animal, male and female, including Rosette, who came specially across the Channel to try and retain the former of the cups which she won so cleverly last year. "The Doctor," like his namesake, was quite "the lion" of the place, and it was difficult to get near him on the second day as he stood with a perfect bouquet of streamers and cup-cards above his head. He is a pure Booth by the Monk from Sylph, who formed in her day one of Mr. Barnes's long succession of first-prize yearling heifers on the same spot. We understand that he is to go shortly to Aylesby, and that it is by no means improbable that he will be seen in the Canterbury lists. Captain Spencer most undeniably turned the tables on to the Irishman for the aged-bull prize with his Young Ben by Benedict, bred by Mr. Dickinson, of Ulverston; and, in fact, throughout the classes the Warlaby blood achieved such a great triumph that its adherents need not mourn over the early death of Nectarine Blossom, albeit she only leaves three bull calves behind.

The prima donna of the yearling heifers was exhibited by Mr. Crobie in the shape of a granddaughter of Lamp of Lothian; and Mr. Marjoribanks was a good second with Diadem by Marmaduke, who was purchased as a calf at Mr. Harvey Combe's sale last March. The yearling heifer we alluded to last week did not come, but we learnt that she and her calf are "both doing well," and that she is giving eight quarts of milk a day. Mr. Turnbull's Lady of Bonhill and Mr. Christy's Limerick Lass the Third had first and second honours in the two-year-old heifer class; and Rosette and Sweetheart held the same place among the aged cows. Rosette looked much thickened every way since last year, and the point as to the premiership of the yard had to be decided at last between her and "The Doctor." In the rest of the classes we especially noted the black Kerry bull Ned of the Hills, the Alderney bull Robin Adair, and Mr. Toole's Alderney cow.

The sheep were more numerous than usual, and the show very fairly good. The Leicester prizes went, as of yore, to Messrs. Owen and Thunder; the short-wool luck rested with Messrs. Hamilton and Broughton; and Mr. Beale Brown was pre-eminent with his Cotswolds, among which his five hogget ewes were, perhaps, the best sample. The pig classes had some good specimens amongst them; and the peerless king of the poultry-yard was an American turkey-cock, of the most wondrous plumage and form we ever met with.

In the implement-yard the articles were of a lighter character than usual, beginning with native frieze and extending to cattle-gauges, railway-fences, and every conceivable article for a farmer's field and hearth. These composed, perhaps, the best part of the show. The steam-engines, and other heavy instruments of rural warfare, were few, and their absence was decidedly a relief to the ear.

COMMERCIAL STAMPS.—The Act imposing new stamp duties has come into operation. Henceforth not only all cheques drawn upon bankers must be stamped, but also every letter to a banker directing payments to be made or money to be forwarded must have affixed to it an adhesive penny stamp (not a postage stamp), which stamp must be cancelled by the writer with his name or initials and the date on which the stamp is used. A penalty of £20 is attached to the non-observance of these directions.

CLOCK PRESENTED TO THE 3RD BATTALION GRENADIER GUARDS.

THE officers of this regiment, which won such renown at the battles of Inkerman and Alma, have lately received, in the clock of which we give an Engraving, one of the most beautiful testimonials which we have had the pleasure of viewing. It was presented by the Earl of Sefton to his brother officers on his Lordship leaving the service. The happy idea embodied in the perpetuation of the undying glory of the battalion, in portrait statuettes of four of its bravest soldiers (Bancroft, Baldwin, King, and Kenyon), whose separate deeds procured them each signal honour in the never-to-be-forgotten records of the Crimea—Bancroft, it will be remembered, being the hero of that desperate encounter with five Russians, all of whom he killed, and in which the possession of extraordinary strength, combined with true soldierly courage, alone rendered him victorious; while Baldwin, under very heavy fire at the battle of Inkerman, rescued several of his wounded comrades; the others performing deeds of equal daring. They are represented in two of the most characteristic positions of the soldier. These figures have been worked out with surprising truth and fidelity. Surmounting the dial are alto-relievi of Fame and Victory. The testimonial was designed and modeled by Marshall Wood, whose name as the sculptor of the beautiful figure of "Daphne" in last year's exhibition of the Royal Academy will be known to many of our readers; and manufactured at the establishment of Mr. C. F. Hancock, of Bruton-street.

PRESENTATION OF PLATE TO MR. STOKES, OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

THE officers and workmen of the East Indian Railway have presented a silver vase and two drinking-cups to Mr. Lingard Stokes, superintendent of the locomotive department of that railway. The circumstances under which this testimonial was given will be gathered from the following extract from the presentation address:—"We cannot allow you to depart from amongst us without testifying our unfeigned respect towards you. We, therefore, as a mark of the high esteem in which we have held your unremitting zeal for our welfare, beg to present you with this small testimonial. Apart from your professional duties, you have ever manifested the greatest interest in our instruction and amusement; we are indebted to you for the establishment of our literary institution, and also our theatre, which has been a great source of amusement to all connected with the railway, and also to the inhabitants of the station generally." The testimonial was recently presented at Howrah, near Calcutta.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED BY THE EARL OF SEFTON TO THE OFFICERS OF THE 3RD BATTALION OF THE GRENADIER GUARDS.

PLATE PRESENTED TO MR. STOKES, THE LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER OF THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

MR. GEORGE RENNIE, LATE GOVERNOR OF THE FALKLAND ISLANDS.

THIS gentleman, whose death occurred on the 22nd ult., was the son of George Rennie, Esq., of Fantassie, East Lothian, North Britain, the eminent agriculturist, and nephew of John Rennie, the celebrated engineer, and well sustained, during his brief career, the hard-earned reputation attached to that name. In early life, devoting himself to sculpture, he produced in Rome some remarkable works, one of which, "The Grecian Archer," he presented to the Athenæum Club, where it is now to be seen. Dissatisfied with the state of the arts in this country, he boldly denounced it on his return, and suggested to Mr. William Sewart, M.P., in the year 1836, the Parliamentary Committee, which, besides inquiring into the state of the National Gallery, Royal Academy, and other institutions connected with the arts, caused the immediate formation of those schools of design which have since given so great an impulse to the arts and manufactures of this country. Together with the late Joseph Hume, M.P., he proposed and obtained the freest access to the public monuments of the arts in St. Paul's, the National Gallery, British Museum, and other depositories of fine art. When a member of the House of Commons he first suggested, for the security of the public, that the Serpentine as well as the St. James's water should be reduced to a uniform depth, and otherwise improved. If not the first inventor, he was certainly the first to suggest to Sir William Symonds, then Surveyor of the Navy, the now widely-recognised advantages of water-tight compartments in building ships.

Mr. Rennie was a strong Liberal in politics, and was in the year 1841 returned for Ipswich in conjunction with Mr. Rigby Wason. At the next general election he was again in the field for Ipswich, with every prospect of success, when he was induced to retire in favour of Mr. Hugh Adair, the local candidate.

Shortly after this he was offered the government of the Falkland Islands, which, small as was the appointment compared with his merits, he accepted, thinking that it would give some scope for those varied resources he felt that he so eminently possessed. During his government he raised the small colony from the most abject condition to one of as great prosperity as its very limited resources would admit of; so much so that whereas before his arrival the inhabitants had been entirely dependent on miserable rations supplied from England, they, by his vigorous exertions and skilful arrangements, were soon not only enabled to dispense with these and live with ease and plenty, but could supply ships of war and merchant-vessels with provisions and coals at a cheaper rate than they could procure them at Valparaiso. But the great masterpiece of his government was the skill, courage, and determination with which he utterly frustrated the unjustifiable pretensions of the Americans with respect to the fisheries in the Falkland Islands, as well as the depredations they were in the habit of committing on the cattle, &c., belonging to the Falkland Islands Company. With no force to back him but a little sloop-of-war, mounting six guns and a little battery with two guns, constructed by himself, and served by a few enrolled pensioners, he concluded a most difficult negotiation with the Captain of a heavy American corvette, whose guns were pointed upon the town, ready to open fire at any moment. In front of those guns, and in spite of the most violent threats of the American Captain, two American whalers were taken into the harbour, their skippers brought into court, fined, and made to pay for the depredations they had committed on the coast; while the Captain of the corvette looked on with suppressed indignation, unable to find a loophole for taking any measures to prevent the course of justice. In all these transactions he received the highest approbation of the home Government.

Mr. Rennie returned to England about four years ago, and for the last two years suffered a bad state of health, which ended in an attack of paralysis, from which he never rallied. The country has lost in him a truly efficient and faithful public servant.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED TO LIEUT.-COLONEL CAINE, LATE CHIEF MAGISTRATE OF HONG-KONG.

IF there be a position which, more than any other, tests the administrative capacity of a man, it is when, invested with provisional charges, he holds on the confines of barbarism the "marches" of civilisation. Whilst the European administrator, surrounded with the appliances of an organised system, and acting through the agency of recognised laws, directs with ease the economy of the State, confident always that, should moments of emergency demand from his hands the responsibility of initiative acts, a public opinion, at once just and perspicuous, will interpret with fairness the integrity of his aims,—colonial rulers must frequently, with the debris of a decayed society, erect the edifice of a new system, which neither shocks Eastern prejudices nor Western civilisation. Without precedents to guide, or a public opinion to which to appeal, every act is an additional responsibility, every decision a ground of contest, where truth must vindicate herself against blind bigotry or suspicious dread.

The offices of Chief-Magistrate and Lieutenant-Governor held by Lieut.-Colonel Caine in Hong-Kong were functions peculiarly demanding that judgment, decision, and fertility of resource essential in the successful administration of colonial rule.

When adverting, now and in years ago, to the difficulties which beset this officer, and his ability in surmounting them, the Chinese Mail said:—"In May, 1841, he was specially chosen to fill the important and arduous post of Chief Magistrate of Hong-Kong. Cast, as it were, on the side of a barren mountain, with literally nothing but a mat but to shield him from the weather, the 'Chief Magistrate' was left to his own resources for 'an establishment.' Without architect or engineer, a suitable gaol, courthouse, &c., arose under his indefatigable industry and auspices; and, where the wild dog howled three years ago, the housetop struggler, or old friend, now finds a warm and hospitable reception. Frequently did he have to be allowed to join his regiment; but the discriminating statesman at the head of affairs in China had found in him a man capable of something more than hunting down the long-tails."

To have won under circumstances such as these the approbation of his Government and the applause of his countrymen would in itself have been no small pride; but the testimonial presented to him by the Chinese merchants of Hong-Kong proves that his personal qualities gained him the esteem and even the affection of a people whom he governed, as the representative of a foreign, and frequently of a hostile, State.

Such a tribute, spontaneously offered under circumstances such as these, is perhaps the deepest homage that a man can receive from his fellows, evidencing, as it does, his possession of that courage and magnanimity which are oftener seen in the pages of fiction than in the records of history. The occasion of this gallant officer's final departure from the scene of his labours was seized by the Chinese community for a testimony of their respect. Issuing from the temple of their gods, they attended him in solemn procession to the place of embarkation, where, in the midst of ceremonies fraught with meaning to a people versed in the symbolism of the East, they, whilst bidding him a last adieu, and invoking for his protection the powers of the deep, brought his acceptance of this memorial of their affection, this pledge of their esteem. The mirror, wrought in solid burnished silver, which forms the subject of the Engraving we have already referred to, was then presented to him. It is eighteen inches in height, and weighs 93 oz. 10 dwts. On its face it bears the following inscription in Chinese :—"A tribute of praise to the good administration of Lieut.-Governor Caine. We look for your Excellency as for the coming of the new year; and, although you are far from us, we forget not to obey. Respectfully presented by the Chinese trading population of Hong-Kong. Dec., 1859."

The work itself is an excellent specimen of Chinese art, and is executed with a boldness of style and a decision of handling we were hardly prepared to expect from Oriental artists. This mirror, was accompanied by an address, written in golden characters, on a satin ground, in the form of a banner, in which the Chinese community testify their affection and esteem for the gallant officer.

THE RIGHT REV. J. C. WIGRAM, BISHOP NOMINATE OF ROCHESTER.

THE NEW BISHOP OF ROCHESTER.

IN last Tuesday's Gazette it was notified that the Queen had been pleased to order a congé d'elire to pass the Great Seal, empowering the Dean and Chapter of the cathedral church of Rochester to elect a Bishop of that see, the same being void by the death of Doctor George Murray, late Bishop thereof; and that her Majesty has also been pleased to recommend Joseph Cotton Wigram, M.A., Archdeacon of Winchester, to be elected by the said Dean and Chapter Bishop of the said see of Rochester. The reverend gentleman was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1810, when he was sixth wrangler. He was ordained Deacon in 1812, by Dr. Sparke, Bishop of Ely; and Priest in 1813, by Dr. Rowley, Bishop of London. He was for some years Curate of St. James's Church, Piccadilly; and in 1839 was presented to the rectory of East Tested, near Alton, Hampshire. In 1847 he was appointed to the archdeaconry of Winchester; and, upon the resignation of the living of Southampton by Lord Guilford, in 1850, the Bishop nominated Archdeacon Wigram to it, and he has held the living up to the present time. The Bishop nominate belongs to the Low Church party. Bishop Wigram will not be entitled to a seat in the House of Lords until a vacancy shall arise in some diocese other than Canterbury, York, Durham, Winchester, and London.

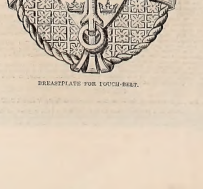
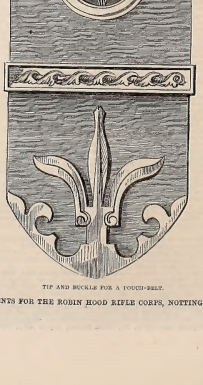
ORNAMENTS WORN BY THE NOTTINGHAM RIFLE CORPS.

THE designs for these tasteful and unique ornaments were supplied by Mr. T. C. Hine, of Nottingham, who has fully succeeded in his endeavour to produce something rather more artistic than is to be found in the ordinary Brummagen type of metal ornament which characterises the usual fittings of this kind. We are glad to find that Mr. Hine has managed to substitute a graceful ornament for the senseless door-knocker device of a lion's head, with a ring through the mouth, which forms a prominent object on the pouch-belt of almost every rifleman in the country.



The badge worn in front of the cap contains a monogram and the motto "Evocatus paratus" (Ready when wanted). For the officers it is in silver, and for the privates in bronze.

The belt-clasp for the privates is in bronze, and contains a device corresponding with the motto, and in harmony with the name of the corps. The bow unstrung is hung to a branch of oak, to which is also suspended the horn.



The boss, with the loop for chain and whistle, is in silver, and is used by the officers, together with the buckle-top and slide. The first contains the town arms, and in the last named the letters V. R. are pierced.

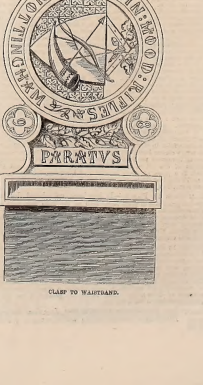
DECLARATION OF VOTES FOR THE ANNEXATION OF TUSCANY WITH SARDINIA.



EARLY one morning last month the generally-apathetic Florentines were roused to a state of temporary excitement by the roar of the cannon announcing that the result of the voting for and against union with Sardinia was known.

The chief magistrate afterwards proclaimed from a window of the Palazzo Vecchio, in the newly-christened Piazza del Popolo (formerly Piazza del Gran' Duca), that the people of Tuscany had expressed their wish for union by an overwhelming majority. The numbers were—for union, 366,554; for a separate kingdom, 14,000. This result was received, we are told, with a mighty shout by the multitude assembled in the square and streets.

The Piazza del Gran' Duca—we like its old name the best—is the central spot in Florence for business and interest, and thither flock the people when any great event is stirring.

Our View is taken from under the Loggia de Lanzi—a noble specimen of Transition Gothic, built by Orgagna, in 1375. It consists of three circular arches, supported by clustered, angular pillars. This building is so fine in its proportions that Michael Angelo once suggested that the loggia should be carried all round the piazza. The singular name by which it is now known was given to it in consequence of a body of German mercenaries, called by the Italians "Lanzi," having one of their guard-houses near the Loggia. Through the arches of the Loggia de' Lanzi we see the Palazzo Vecchio. The massive and almost priscilne strength of this building is characteristic of the old palaces of Florence—half dwelling-house, half fortress.

It was erected, in 1298, by Arnolfo, at the residence of the Gonfaloniere or Magistracy of the Republic, and afterwards became the palace of Cosmo I. It is most imposing from its vast size and rough stonework. The great bubblements and deep machicolations, projecting far over the walls, support the bold and lofty tower, which cannot be seen in the View. Owing to this tower not bearing at all upon the walls, there is a local proverb to the effect that it is built in the air. The large courtyard of the palace is supported by massive pillars. In the centre is a beautiful little fountain by Verocchio. A vast staircase leads by easy steps to the grand saloon, 170 feet long by 75 feet high, a noble chamber, in which through the dim light may be seen some of the faded remains of the magnificence of the Medici. Some other rooms are also worthy of notice, containing old tapestry and portraits. Among the latter is a likeness of the infamous Bianca Capello, represented as a Roman dame of forty. Through the end arch of the Loggia de'Lanzi is seen the commencement of the building called the Uffizi, erected by Cosmo I. for public offices, in the upper story of which is the famous collection of pictures, statues, &c. There is communication between this gallery and the Palazzo Vecchio, and indeed a corridor of communication connects it with the Palazzo Pitti, made by Cosmo I. to enable him to pass from one to the other without entering the streets. The area adjoining the Palazzo Vecchio and Loggia de' Lanzi is full of famous statues—as the "Perseus" of Cellini, "The Rape of the Sabines," by Giovanni di Bologna—a wonderful group for daring execution and spirit; "Judith Slaying Holofernes," by Donatello; and six colossal figures of females, said to represent Sabine priestesses. These are all under the Loggia. The marble statue of "David," by Michael Angelo, is on one side of the doorway of the Palazzo Vecchio, on the other the colossal group of "Hercules Subduing Cacus," by Baccio Bandinelli. Near the palace is the celebrated fountain of Neptune, by Ammanato, commonly called "The Fountain of the Giant;" and further away in the square is the bronze equestrian figure of Cosmo di Medici, by Giovanni di Bologna. A wonderful treasury of art is this noble old square of Florence.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Newmarket Craven, as was anticipated, proved fatal to more than one of the two thousand Derby aspirants, and Buccaneer completely lost his ground as a leading favourite for both events. Confectioner, a bloodlike son of Sweetmeat and Margaret of Anjou, won the Newmarket handicap so easily that he at once jumped into the position of first favourite for the City and Suburban, and even made his appearance at 40 to 1 in the Derby quotations. All doubts of North Lincoln being a "roarer" were set at rest by his race for the Craven Plate, as he was beaten by three platers, and made such a noise when Wells pulled him up that he might have been almost heard in the High-street. Plum Pudding, brother to Rainbow, King of Diamonds, Viatka, Loiterer, and St. James, were all beaten for the Three-year-old Biennial by Mr. Tom Parr's Avalanche, a daughter of Wild Dayrell; and as she is engaged in the Oaks we thereby get the field strengthened for that event which, with the exception of Contadina and Seclusion, was singularly deficient of any fillies of class or pretension. Defender proved unable to give 7lb. to Mouravieff in the Four-year-old Biennial, and was defeated easily; and on Wednesday Sir Joseph Hawley appeared in his old four, winning twice in succession with his Gallus. Sagitta, own sister to and the living image of Toxophilite, won the Column Stakes; but the field opposed to her were really so moderate that we fear the ex-Prime Minister has a poor chance of winning either the One Thousand or Oaks, in both of which she is engaged.

Epsom Spring, lengthened out into two days, has some good sport to offer. There are one hundred acceptances for the City and Suburban Handicap on Thursday, on which day the Two-year-old Stakes will also be run; while the Metropolitan Handicap and the New Two-year-old Stakes stand for Friday. Zodiac (3lb. extra) is among the forty nominations in the latter. Among the recent foal arrivals is an own sister to Lupellus, whom many writers still persist in styling "Lupullus" and "Lupulus," in spite of Mr. Parr's declaration on the subject, and the authority of the greatest Latin dictionary of the day. Steeplechasing will be rather brisk next week. The Harborough Grand National, whose conditions seem to have been a fruitful source of dispute, is fixed for Wednesday; the Northumberland and Howden for Thursday; and the Chepstow Hunt and East Suffolk Hunt for Friday. Sir John Arnott has quite stirred up the lovers of Drag Hunts in Ireland, and two more on a very extensive scale are on the tapis, and open to all three countries.

The East Lothian country is, we hear, to be given up, and the late pack has been sold to Major Wellütt, the new master of the Rufford. Several changes are announced, especially among whips, and we believe that Dan Berkshire, the first whip to the Quorn, is to hunt the Warwickshire next year. Sir Watkin Wynn's had a very great run a few days before the close of the season, the first thirty minutes without a check, and the distance calculated at seven miles from point to point. The run, which occupied 1h. 40m. in all, was from Stych to the Loggerheads, in the North Staffordshire country. Unfortunately, John Walker was too unwell to come out, and the first whip took his place.

The coursing season made an excellent finish at the Caledonian Club, but Rosy Morn and Selby did not win more than one course in the Caledonian Open Cup; while Refulgent, apparently quite recovered from her fearful Ashdown contest with Patience, won three in the Westraw Stakes, before Canaradzo put her out.

Lady Stamford in the Hunting Field.—A correspondent of a Leicestershire paper sends the following:—"I am an admirer of feminine equestrianism. Much had been told me of Lady Stamford's excelling in the art, but, till Friday last, I never had an opportunity of seeing the Countess on horseback. The hounds met at Wymeswold. Lord and Lady Stamford went to the meet in a carriage and four, took luncheon at the principal inn, and mounted—Lady Stamford on a rather plain brown horse. Before the hounds were well in Ella's Gorse a fox bolted, and they were laid on immediately. During the circuit, which was exactly that of a steeplechase, and run in steeplechase time, I had the good fortune to be very near to the Countess, and consequently in a very forward place—in fact, close to the hounds all the way, and I had, therefore, an excellent opportunity of observing that lady's riding. The country, as all old fox-hunters know, is difficult to cross. There were two brooks and at least fifty strong fences to be leaped, eight or nine of them regular posers. It was a perfect treat, and a lesson too, to see the Countess take these fences. The hand and seat were perfection. There was no bustling bravado preparation for them; calmly, gracefully, and always with a word of cheer, Lady Stamford put her steed to the leap, and showed a judgment in handing him over that I have never seen surpassed even by the most accomplished horseman. At one fence I fully apprehended a baulk, a détour, or a fall, but it was cleared without at all disturbing the equanimity or equipoise of Lady Stamford, though several of the rougher sex refused it. There were two serious falls in the run—a proof that the line was a difficult one. I have seen many clever horsewomen going well over the Quorn country—the Duchess of Somerset particularly—but I never saw any lady so perfectly mistress of the art of equitation as Lady Stamford; and I shall always think it a piece of good fortune that I happened to be one in the first flight on Friday last, thus enabling me to witness what I have often heard of, but never fully credited."

The Ham Fair in Paris.—It has been calculated that there were 700,000 kilogrammes of pork hams sold at the ham fair, held on the Boulevard Bourdon, in Paris, during three days of the last week. The hams most in demand were those from Yorkshire, which were all disposed of on the second day. Next in request were the Bayonne hams, and after them the Strasburg, Metz, Westphalia, and Bolognese. The cash received during the fair is estimated at 2,000,000f.

The Voting in Savoy and Nice.—The Governor of Chambery has issued a proclamation specifying in what manner the vote of annexation is to take place in Savoy on the 22nd inst. Every native of Savoy, or son of a native, who is twenty-one years of age, and who has been six months in his present residence in the country, is entitled to express his wishes. The vote is to be taken by ballot, and the bulletins are merely to contain the words "Yes" or "No."——A similar notice has been issued for the country of Nice; the time, however, appointed for the vote being, as already stated, a week earlier.

A hurricane had passed over Annotto Bay, Jamaica, destroying several houses. The shock of an earthquake was experienced at Jamaica on the 23rd ult.

A Scene in the Piedmontese Chambers.—A melancholy incident interrupted the sitting of the Sardinian Parliament on April 4. General Quaglia, the temporary president of the Chamber by right of age, broke down in a short speech in which he was putting one of the electors to the vote, and sank into the arms of some of the bystanders, struck with a fit of apoplexy or paralysis. The sitting was adjourned instantly. General Quaglia died on the 7th inst. The deceased general was seventy-four years old. His funeral took place on Easter Sunday with great pomp, all the deputies attending.

The Earl of Ellesmere has accepted the office of President of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, in the room of the Earl of Carlisle, who had tendered his resignation in consequence of absence from England, but who retains his connection with the society as one of the Vice-Presidents. The new President will, in May, throw open the splendid gallery at Bridgewater House for the reception of the members and others interested in the fine arts, at a conversazione.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Notwithstanding that the bulk of the dividend payments has now been made, and that the supply of capital in the hands of the discount houses has somewhat increased, the value of money still rules very high, when compared with the early part of the year. In Lombard-street the lowest quotation for the best short paper is still 4½ per cent; and in many instances 4¾, and even 5, per cent has been paid for accommodation. Four-months' bills are not discounted under from 5¼ to 5½ per cent. The present state of the money market, we may observe, arises not from an actual want of money—taking the average of our trade during the past six months—but from a sudden expansion in the demand for produce and goods, both home and foreign. In point of fact, trade generally has outstripped the extent of the usual sources of supply; and hence capital is likely to command high rates during the next two or three months. The present pressure for money is, too, in a great measure, the result of heavy repayments to the Bank, which have considerably exceeded three millions sterling; consequently, the dividend receipts have been suddenly taken out of the general discount market. On Thursday the directors advanced their minimum rate of discount to 5 per cent.

Very little bullion has come to hand from any quarter, but the demand for gold on Continental account has not increased; consequently, very few withdrawals have taken place from the Bank of England. The shipments by the present packet to India amount to only £219,965 in silver, and £26,000 in gold. The Exchange at Calcutta shows an adverse movement of about 1 per cent; but, in China the quotation has declined 1 to 2 per cent, so that there is no immediate prospect of an active demand for silver. The Mexican dollars brought by the last steamer have sold at 62½d. per oz., being a decline of ½d. from previous quotations. The value of bar silver is almost nominal.

The adjudication of the Victoria loan of £2,650,000 took place on Wednesday. The minimum price required by the colony was 105. The tenders at and above that figure amounted to only £1,570,000; consequently, there still remains about 40 per cent of the whole amount yet to be allotted. The Debentures have been done at ½ premium and ½ discount.

Advices from Peru state that the Government has succeeded in buying 1,066,000 dollars of the Six per Cent Stock, at prices ranging from 95 to 99¾.

The amount of business doing in National Stocks has been much restricted; but no sales of moment have taken place, so that the supply of stock in the market has not increased to any extent. On Monday Bank Stock realised 225; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents, 93 92¾; Consols, for Money, 94⅛ ¼ ⅛; Ditto, for Account, 94⅛ ¼ ⅛; India Five per Cents, 105 104⅞; Ditto Enfaced Paper, Five per Cent, 98⅛ ¼; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 104; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅝; Ditto, 1859, 96⅝; Ditto Bonds, par. to 4s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 8s. to 12s. prem. Very few changes took place in the quotations on the following day. The market, however, was flat. Bank Stock sold at 226 and 224½; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents, 92¾ 93; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 79 78½; Long Annuities, 1885, 17⅝; India Five per Cents, 105 104⅞; Ditto Five per Cent Enfaced Paper, 91⅛ ¼; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 104; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 97; Ditto Bonds, 5s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 8s. to 12s. prem. The operations on Wednesday were much restricted, and prices closed as follows:—Reduced Three per Cents, 92¾; Consols, 94⅛ ¼; New Three per Cents, 92¾ ⅞; India Five per Cents, 104⅞ to 105; Ditto Five per Cent Paper, 98⅛ ¼; Ditto Debentures, 97; Ditto Bonds, 5s. to 1s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 10s. to 13s. prem. On Thursday, Home Stocks were flat, yet very little change took place in the quotations:—Consols, for Money, were done at 94 to 94¼; for May, 94⅜ ½; the Reduced and New Threes, 92⅝ ¾; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 78¾; India Five per Cents, 104⅞ to 105⅛; the Debentures, 86⅝ to 97; Exchequer Bills, 8s to 12s. prem. Bank Stock was 226. India Enfaced Paper, Five per Cent, 98½; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103⅞.

The dealings in the shares of the newly-formed companies have been limited:—Ocean Marine Insurance have sold at 2¾ to 2 prem; Universal Marine, ½ prem.; London and Provincial Marine, 5-16 to ⅜ prem.; and Bank of Turkey, 1 to 1½ dis.

In the Foreign House the dealings have been rather limited. Brazilian Five per Cents have realised 100 ex div.; Ditto, 1839 and 1859, 98½; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 91; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 86½; Chilian Three Per Cents, 71⅞ ex div.; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66; Dutch Four per Cents, 99⅞ ex div.; Grenada New Active Three-and-a-Half per Cents, 4⅝; Mexican Three per Cents, 21½; Peruvian Three per Cents, 69½; Portuguese Three per Cents, 42; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 96½; Russian Three per Cents, 64½; Sardinian Five per Cents, 83¾; Spanish Three per Cents, 46½; Ditto, New Deferred, 35½; Ditto, Passive, 14½; Ditto, Committee's Certificates of Coupon, not funded, 4½; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 79¼; Ditto, New, 62.

Joint-stock Bank Shares have changed hands to a moderate extent, and prices, generally, have ruled firm. Agra and United Service have realised 75¾; Australasia, 73½; Bank of London, 52; Bank of Egypt, 21¾; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 20½ ex div.; British North American, 56⅝; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 16½; London Chartered of Australia, 22⅝; London Joint-stock, 31½; London and Westminster, 58; National Provincial of England, New, 24; Oriental, 44½; Ottoman, 17½; Union of Australia, 46½; and Union of London, 30.

The transactions in Colonial Government Securities have been moderate, at full quotations, Canada Government Six per Cents, January and July, having sold at 115; Ditto, 1879, 112½; Ditto, 1883, 113½; New Brunswick Six per Cents, 109½; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1871 to 1876, 100; Ditto 1888 and upwards, 99¾; Nova Scotia Six per Cents, 109½; and Victoria Six per Cents, 107½ ex div.

In Miscellaneous Securities the following business has been done:—Anglo-Mexican Mint, 14⅝; Berlin Waterworks, 4¾; Australian Agricultural, 32½; Crystal Palace, 28½; Ditto Preference, 100½; Electric Telegraph, 106½; Great Ship, ½; London General Omnibus, 1⅝; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 3½; Oriental Gas, New, ⅜; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 79; Ditto New, 34; Royal Mail Steam, 52¾; Van Diemen's Land, 11; Birmingham Canal, 93¾; Regent's, 20; West Middlesex Waterworks, 106.

In the early part of the week the Railway Share Market was steady, and a fair amount of business was passing in it, at full prices. Since then, however, it has become heavy, at drooping currencies. The traffic receipts still continue to show an increase, when compared with last year. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange, April 9.—Only a limited supply of English wheat was on offer in to-day's market, in but middling condition. Most kinds were in fair request, and prices ruled steady. Foreign wheat—the show of which was rather limited—changed hands slowly; nevertheless, the quotations were well supported. There was a fair inquiry for barley, at extreme currencies. Malt, however, moved off slowly, on former terms. The oat trade was firm, and prices ruled steady. Both beans and peas were a slow inquiry, but not cheaper. In flour only a limited business was transacted, at previous quotations.

April 11.—Wheat commanded quite Monday's quotations. All spring corn was firm, and good sound oats were rather dearer. No change took place in the value of flour.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 41s. to 51s.; ditto, white, 44s. to 47s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 41s. to 51s.; rye, 30s. to 32s.; grinding barley, 26s. to 27s.; distilling ditto, 29s to 31s.; malting ditto, 30s. to 45s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 49s. to 68s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 56s. to 68s.; Chevalier, 68s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s. to 25s.; potato ditto, 20s. to 30s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s. to 25s.; ditto white, 22s. to 28s.; tick beans, 34s. to 36s.; grey peas, 33s. to 35s.; maple, 37s. to 38s.; white, 36s. to 38s.; boilers, 38s. to 40s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 40s. to 43s.; town households, 38s. to 39s.; country marks, 32s. to 34s. per 280lb.; American flour, 24s. to 28s. per barrel; French 31s. to 38s. per sack.

Seeds.—Clover seed is in somewhat improved request, at very full prices. All other seeds move off slowly, on former terms. Cakes are very inactive.

Linseed, English crushing, 54s. to 58s.; Calcutta, 51s. to 52s.; hempseed, 37s. to 40s. per quarter; coriander, 14s. to 16s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 14s.; ditto, white, 11s. to 14s.; tares, 7s. to 7s. 6d. per bushel; English rapeseed, 62s. to 66s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £9 10s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 0s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 50s. to 54s. per quarter; red clover, 44s. to 45s.; white ditto, 80s. to 87s. per cwt.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 109,135; barley, 28,100; oats, 9942; rye, 102; beans, 4641; peas, 793 quarters.

Tea.—The demand for all kinds rules very inactive. In prices, however, no change of importance has taken place. The stock in the United Kingdom is 70,000,000lbs., against 68,000,000lbs. in 1859.

Sugar.—All raw qualities have moved off slowly, at about last week's quotations, and the show of samples is seasonably good. Refined sugars are inactive, at 51s. to 51s. 6d. per cwt. for common brown lumps. Crushed and pieces rule steady.

Coffee.—The demand, generally, is in a healthy state, at very full prices.

Rice.—There is still a full average business doing in all kinds, at extreme currencies.

Provisions.—The butter trade is in a most inactive state, and prices rule almost nominal. Bacon moves off freely, and Waterford sizeable is worth 63s. to 65s. per cwt. Hams and lard move off freely, at extreme rates. In other provisions very little is passing.

Tallow.—The demand is somewhat restricted; nevertheless, prices rule firm. P.Y.C., on the spot is selling at 56s. 6d. per cwt. The imports continue limited.

Oils.—Linseed oil is quoted at 27s 9d. per cwt on the spot. Most other oils are a dull inquiry. Spirits of turpentine are selling at 35s. 6d. to 36s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—Rum moves off slowly, but, compared with last week, no change has taken place in prices. Brandy is inactive, at late rates. Grain spirit is firm.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £2 18s. to £4 15s.; clover ditto, £4 0s. to £5 15s.; and straw, £1 1s. to £1 16s per load. Trade steady.

Coals.—Best house coals 19s. 6d. to 20s.; seconds, 17s. to 18s.; Hartley's, 15s. to 15s. 6d.; and manufacturers', 12s. 6d. to 15s per ton.

Hops.—Good and fine samples are in fair request, at full quotations; but all other kinds move off slowly, at late rates. Prices vary from 84s. to 147s. per cwt.

Wool.—The amount of business doing in this market is only moderate. Prices, however, are well supported.

Potatoes.—The supplies are moderate, and the demand may be considered steady, at from 85s. to 160s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, April 12).—Our market to-day was scantily supplied with beasts. Prime Scots and crosses sold steadily, at full quotations; otherwise the beef trade was in a sluggish state, on former terms. We were fairly supplied with sheep, and all breeds were in request, at very full prices, the best Downs having sold at 5s. 10d. per 8lb. Lambs, the show of which was moderate, changed hands freely, at from 6s. to 7s. 8d. per 8lb. There was a steady inquiry for calves, at prices quite equal to Monday. Pigs were tolerably firm in price; but milch cows were a dull sale. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 4d. to 3s. 6d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 6d.; prime Scots, &c., 4s. 8d. to 4s. 10d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 4d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; large coarse calves, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 6d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 8d. to 6s. 0d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 10d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; lambs, 6s. to 7s. 8d.; suckling calves, 18s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs 22s to 29s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 812; cows, 132; sheep and lambs, 7003; calves, 180; pigs, 300. Foreign: Beasts, 810; sheep, 450; calves, 100.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are moderate, and the demand may be called steady, as follows:—Beef, from 2s. 6d. to 4s. 2d.; mutton, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 4d.; lamb, 5s. 0d. to 6s. 0d.; veal, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 2d.; pork, 3s. 6d. to 5s. 0d. per 8lb. by the carcase.

CAUTION to purchasers of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—In consequence of the rapid effects produced by this celebrated Oil, and the small quantities required to be administered as compared with the Pale Oil, some unscrupulous chemists with a view to increased profit, endeavour to recommend or substitute other kinds, under the fallacious pretence that they are of equally good quality, or attempt to disparage Dr. de Jongh's Oil, which, as is well known, has received the highest encomiums from the Faculty at home and abroad. Where this discreditable course is pursued, purchasers are earnestly requested to apply to a really respectable Chemist, or to Dr de Jongh's Agents, ANSAR, HARFORD, and CO., 77, Strand, London.

PHILARÈTE CHASLES.

THERE are few lives of literary men (and by literary men we mean men of deep research and constant investigation into the arcana of literature) which present a more surprising composition than that of M. Philarète Chasles, the present Conservator of the Mazarine Library, and a Professor of the College of France. Circumstances sometimes outweigh a vocation; but in the case of the subject of our article the vocation, as it will be seen, pronounced itself in so decided a manner that even the most extraordinary circumstances were powerless to overwhelm it.

Philarète Chasles was born at Mainvilliers, near Chartres, on the 8th of October, 1799. His father, a stern Republican General and member of the Convention, was one of those who had voted for the execution of Louis XVI. The old soldier, having subsequently given offence to the Directory, was a prisoner in the Château of Ham at the time when his second son was born; and it was there that the name of Philarète (which in Greek signifies the friend of virtue) was selected by his father. The man of Spartan pride and purity naturally supposed that his son would be a lover of virtue. Madame Chasles was a lady of aristocratic birth; and Philarète bears in his peculiarly mixed character marks of his double origin—the combination of refinement on the one hand, and the disinterested love of truth and probity on the other.

At a very early age Philarète Chasles was destined by his father to serve his country in a military capacity in the cause of the Republic, for which his elder son had already sacrificed his life in his seventeenth year; and, after a careful education at the College of Angers, he was preparing to pass his examination at the School of St. Cyr. But it was decreed that Philarète should never wear the national uniform.

The youth of Philarète Chasles was surrounded by circumstances depending upon the political events of the time. First of all, his father, and shortly after Philarète himself, sought an asylum in England, where the accomplishments of the latter brought him into contact with many of the most celebrated Englishmen of that day—Bentham, Coleridge, Ugo Foscolo, Southey, Hazlitt, and Wordsworth; Cobbett, Hunt, Sir Francis Burdett, and other political leaders welcomed the young savant with the cordiality which his talents and industry merited. He turned his learning to advantage in the revisal and correction of a very celebrated edition of the classics, remarkable to this day for its accuracy; and he has always attributed to his occupation as a printer's reader in London much of that precision and exactitude which have characterised his literary labours ever since. A full detail of the adventures of his early days previously to leaving France, and in England, may be found in his "Study of Men and Manners in the Nineteenth Century," the translation of which work would prove a valuable addition to English literature.

M. PHILARÈTE CHASLES.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY NADAR.

Philarète Chasles was more than twenty years of age when he returned to France, where he shortly afterwards founded, under M. Saulnier, subsequently Prefect of Orleans, the Revue Britannique, a well-known and much-appreciated periodical. In this Revues he omitted, during twelve years, the most wholesome ideas on English and American liberty, to which he is ardently favourable. Firmly attached to his principles, Philarète is notwithstanding anti-revolutionary, and wisely thinks that all ameliorations should be obtained by progressive means. Ever since 1829 he has been one of the principal writers of the Journal des Débats, in which he has published from time to time a series of very remarkable articles.

In 1837 Philarète Chasles was appointed by M. Guizot (then Minister of Public Instruction) Conservator of the Bibliothèque Mazarine of the Institute of France, one of the principal libraries in Paris. We may remark here a fact much to the honour of Philarète Chasles. He had never rendered any political service whatever to M. Guizot, and, although he had always professed a great esteem for that illustrious statesman, he was not by any means enlisted among his political adherents or followers. He obtained this honourable post, therefore, without intrigue, and for no other reason than that of his being recognised as an erudite literary scholar.

The Chair of Foreign Literature at the College of France was created expressly for him, by M. Villemain, in 1840. The lectures of M. Chasles always attract a numerous auditory, although he has never flattered party passion, or employed his eloquence in the tribune either for or against the successive Governments. He has constantly and consistently confined himself to topics of literature, philosophy, and great social questions, without ever entering the precincts of political investigation. During the twenty years that he has lectured at the College of France he has reviewed all the literatures of Europe, and compared together the French, English, and Teutonic languages; and he has just concluded a series of dissertations on the subject of the "Conquest of Hindostan by the English," which are most valuable for the light they throw upon the original acquisition of our Indian empire, and the entire justice and impartiality of the able French professor's remarks.

As a writer, generally speaking, Chasles belongs to the same race as our Hazlitt, Coleridge, Charles Lamb, &c.; but he has nevertheless a particular and most original character of his own that can be compared to no other. He is essentially a humorist in the purest sense of the term. The subjects treated by him in the Débats are so varied and so numerous that it would be difficult to mention them all. Philosophy, history, literature, voyages, poetry, novels, have by turns been passed in review by the clever critic with an unusual talent. At the same time profound and brilliant, there is in his criticisms such a stamp of conscientious study that on reading them one feels sure that he has read and reflected on the book of which he speaks,—a rare quality, as by far the greater number of so-called critics scarcely ever peruse attentively the volumes about which they pretend to give an authoritative opinion. Besides his numerous articles in all the principal French reviews and periodicals of our epoch, Philarète Chasles has published fourteen volumes of "Etudes Comparées," a most excellent collection, full of facts, curious and erudite investigations, and ingenious and truly philosophical sketches. He has even found time of late years to send an occasional article in English to our old friend Notes and Queries.

His manner of speaking in public is as remarkable and as varied as the style of his literary compositions. His improvised lectures are of an originality that belongs to him alone, consisting sometimes of a sort of familiar instructive conversation addressed to his hearers, sometimes of serious investigations, mingled with curious anecdotes, and not unfrequently of noble and eloquent exhortations, addressing themselves to the loftiest sentiments of humanity. In his bearing ever different, he remains ever interesting; and the hour devoted to his lecture passes but too quickly for his eager listeners and admirers, in whose minds he continually opens up new intellectual paths and fresh mazes of ideas.

We have been led to give this biographical sketch of Professor Chasles, not simply on account of his being a distinguished French littérateur, but also because we feel proud that he passed a number of his best and most impressionable years on our shores, to which we have every reason to believe he is still much attached. It is not, perhaps, saying too much when we assert that his brilliant success in life has been owing, in a great measure, to those habits of undaunted perseverance and serious investigation of which he must have witnessed so many examples during the eight years he passed in England. To him we owe much of that improved feeling towards Englishmen which has gained ground of late years in France; enlightened and unprejudiced, his observations and his writings have ever had a tendency to conciliate and harmonise. He advocates what he believes, and to this circumstance may be attributed the vigour of his style and language, about which there cannot be two opinions.

M. Chasles is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour; the Conservateur-doyen of the Mazarine Library; a Professor of the College of France; a most indefatigable writer and an eloquent speaker; a linguist of the first class; a classical scholar; and, moreover, a man who knows how to apply the vast resources of his well-stored mind. We do not desire the death of any Academician; but in terminating our notice of M. Chasles we may be allowed to express the hope that, when next one of "the forty" shall shuffle off the mortal coil, his vacant fauteuil at the French Academy may fall to the lot of Philarète, who would certainly bring to his seat more than an average amount of the brilliant acquirements usually possessed by the distinguished members of the Institute of France.

THE PRINCIPALITY OF MONACO.

A reference to the Map in our Number of the 25th of February last will give a very good idea of the configuration of the territory of this small principality. In accordance with the annexation tendencies of the present time, it is natural that this little spot should be absorbed into one of the larger contiguous States; and the French journals have recently published a report to the effect that an offer has been made to the Prince, who is just now in Paris, for the purchase of his possession by an indemnity of 200,000 francs (£8000) a year. From the amicable relations that existed between France and Monaco for nearly two centuries, it is probable that Charles III. would rather see his dominion annexed to the French empire than form a part of the outlying districts of the kingdom of Italy, which it would do if it were transferred to the rule of Victor Emmanuel, and Oneglia and St. Remo were still to remain Italian—a question yet to be decided.

The principality consisted formerly of Monaco, Menton, and Rochebrune, but the two latter communes were declared independent in 1848, under the reign of Florestan I., and have since been regarded as "free towns," all the efforts of their rightful Prince having failed to bring them back to their allegiance. The entire State covered a superficies of eighty miles, and contained a population of about 6000 souls, more than two-thirds of whom belong to the detached communes. Before its dismemberment the entire revenue of Monaco amounted to upwards of 300,000 francs per annum; so that he indemnity said to have been offered by the French Government may be looked upon as liberal when the diminished importance of the divided State is considered. As, however, the Prince has never recognised the independence of Menton and Rochebrune, it is probable that he will seek to obtain an annual allowance equal in amount to the sum to which his rights as Sovereign entitled him.

Monaco was in the tenth century a simple lordship belonging to the Genoese family Grimaldi. In the sixteenth century its possessor had the title of Prince, and in 1605 Honoré II. placed the principality under the protection of Spain; but in 1641 the same Prince transferred his State to the protection of France, under whose auspices it remained till 1815, when Monaco and its dependencies were placed under the care of the house of Savoy. In 1848 Charles Albert, in spite of the protestations of Prince Florestan I., constituted Rochebrune and Menton free towns, but governed them as if they, in fact, formed a part of Piedmont. Under the former monarchies of France the Princes of Monaco had always been members of, and frequently sat in, the French Chamber of Peers, with the title of Duke of Valentinois, derived from a fief granted to Honoré II., as an indemnity on his separation from Spain, which had esulted in the confiscation of certain estates possessed by the Prince in that country.

Our Sketch of the general aspect of the town of Monaco, as seen from the Mediterranean, is after a drawing made on the spot by M. Brest.

THE PIAZZA DEI FRUTTI, PADUA.

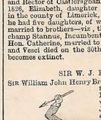
Letters from Italy tell us that, in the event of Austria again showing fight in that country, which she will do probably ere long, Padua will be the basis of operations, and in consequence steamers have arrived at Venice with large cargoes of munition, which have been immediately sent on to the former city. By the courtesy of Mr. Gambart we are enabled to give a View of one of the chief piazze of Padua—the Piazza dei Frutti, or market-place, on one side of which stands the vast building called the Palazzo della Municipalita, or townhall. This very remarkable edifice was built by Pietro Cozzo during the latter end of the twelfth and the beginning of the thirteenth century; it stands upon open arches, and is surrounded by a loggia. Like the Basilica at Vicenza, a lofty roof rises almost half as high again as the walls on which it rests. It is said to be the largest unsupported by columns in the world. Probably (from a certain family likeness) this building suggested to Palladio his Italian Basilica at Vicenza. The upper portion is occupied by a single room 267 feet long and 89 wide, and as much in height, the walls of which are covered with allegorical frescoes. The exterior of the building is wonderfully quaint and picturesque. The roof already noticed is not the original one. In 1306 an Augustine friar famous as an architect came to Padua, and showed to the Paduans drawings he had made of a palace-roof in India. They were so delighted with this that they requested him to reroof their hall in like fashion which he did, receiving for remuneration the materials of the old roof.

The market-place in front of the townhall presents a most picturesque and lively scene, the varied grouping of the buyers and sellers, and their wares, being added to not a little by the awnings and mattings, supported by poles, to exclude the sun.

Padua, perhaps the oldest city in North Italy, contains 40,000 inhabitants; it is about twenty-seven miles by rail from Venice. It is, generally, a rather dull and melancholy town, and, though the University students enliven it to the best of their ability, there is an air of desertion and gloom about its long arcaded streets, and great open piazze (where the grass find no difficulty in flourishing) very depressing; and the occasional glimpses of bowery gardens behind the old palaces and houses are oases of delight to the passengers. One of the most remarkable churches in Italy is at Padua—the Church of Sant' Antonio, built by Nicolo da Pisa. Its character is a combination of the Pointed and Byzantine styles, and its eight cupolas give it quite an Eastern aspect. It is most noteworthy for the splendour and variety of its internal decorations. The treasures of its numerous chapels are countless. Paintings in fresco, lamps, candelabra, bronzes, and sculptures, are scattered about in endless profusion.

A notice of Padua would not be complete without mentioning the Chapel of the Arena, celebrated for its internal mural decorations from the hand of Giotto. These wonderful subjects, displaying so much artistic skill and feeling, can only be hinted at here: indeed, they are too well known to require further comment. Nor have we space to mention in detail the churches, palaces, and old houses of Padua; nor the University, called Il Bò (the Ox), from the sign of the inn originally occupying its site; nor the Botanical Gardens, as old as 1543; nor the Library, with its hundred thousand volumes; nor the Observatory, with its fine views over the Alps and the lagunes of Venice. Padua, with all its treasures, seemed effete. What the new life surging through Italy may do for it remains to be seen.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.



LORD FITZGERALD AND VESCI.

The Right Hon. and Very Rev. Henry Vesey-Fitzgerald, LL.D., Baron Fitzgerald and Vesci, of Clare and Inchicronan, in the county of Clare, and Dean of Kilmore, was the younger of the two sons of the eminent statesman, lawyer, and Prime Sergeant in Ireland, the Right Hon. James Fitzgerald, by his wife, Catherine Vesey, who was created, on the 27th of June, 1826, Baroness Fitzgerald and Vesci, in her own right. Both her sons assumed the additional surname of Vesey. She died in 1832, and was succeeded by her elder son, William, Baron Fitzgerald and Vesci, who filled various high offices of State in Ireland and England; among others, the Presidency of the Board of Trade, and the Presidency of the Board of Control, and who was created a Peer of the United Kingdom as Baron Fitzgerald, of Desmond and Clangibbon, in the county of Cork—a title that became extinct at his demise. He died, unmarried, on the 11th of May, 1843, and was succeeded in his Irish barony by his only brother, Henry, Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci, the subject of this notice, who was in holy orders, and was Dean of Kilmore, Vicar of Ballintemple, and Rector of Castleraghan. His Lordship married, the 7th of September, 1826, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Standish O'Grady, Esq., of Elton, in the county of Limerick, and by her, who died the 5th of March, 1834, he had five daughters, of whom four survive him, and two of these are married to brothers—viz., the Hon. Mabella, married to the Rev. W. Beauchamp Stannus, Incumbent of Woodbury, Salterton, near Exeter; and the Hon. Catherine, married to Walter Trevor Stannus, Esq. Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci died on the 30th ult., and, as he had no male issue, his title becomes extinct.

SIR W. J. H. BROWNE FFOLKES, BART.

Sir William John Henry Browne Ffolkes, second Baronet, of Hillington, in the county of Norfolk, was the only son of Sir Martin Browne, F.R.S., the first Baronet, by his wife, Fanny, daughter and coheir of the late Sir John Turner, Bart., of Warham, in the county of Norfolk, a baronetcy now extinct. He was born at the family seat, Hillington Hall, Norfolk, the 30th of August, 1786, and was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, at which University he graduated as B.A. in 1810 and M.A. in 1813. He succeeded his father as second Baronet the 11th of December, 1821. Sir William married, the 21st of April, 1818, Charlotte, youngest daughter of Dominick Geffrey Browne, Esq., of Castle MacGarrett, in the county of Mayo, and sister of Dominick, first Lord Oranmore, and by this marriage had issue four sons and two daughters; the elder daughter, Margaret, is the wife of Francis Hay Gurney, Esq., of North Runcton, Norfolk. Sir William's eldest son, Martin William Ffolkes, Esq., married, the 30th of March, 1843, Henrietta Bridget, second daughter of the late General Sir C. Wale, K.C.B., of Little Shelford, Cambridgeshre, and had two sons, William Hovell and Martin William, and a daughter, Etheldreda Isabella. Mr. Ffolkes was unfortunately killed by lightning on the 23rd of July, 1849, just four days after the birth of his younger son. His widow died the 14th of November, 1855. His father, Sir William, died on the 24th ult., at Hillington Hall, and is succeeded by his grandson, now Sir William Hovell Ffolkes, the third Baronet, twelve years of age. The Ffolkes are an old Norfolk family, originally from Staffordshire. Martin Ffolkes, the great-great-grandfather of the Baronet just deceased, was Attorney-General to Queen Catherine, widow of Charles II.

THE MASTER OF KINNAIRD.

The Honourable Charles Fox, Master of Kinnaird, was the younger and only surviving son of George William Fox, ninth Baron Kinnaird and first Baron Rosse, of Rosse Priory, Perthshire, by his wife, the Hon. Frances Ann Georgiana Ponsonby, daughter of William Francis Spencer Ponsonby, first Lord De Mauley, and was born on the 5th of June, 1841. He was educated at Eton. His elder and only brother, Victor Alexander, Master of Kinnaird, died, in his eleventh year, in 1851, and the designation of Master of Kinnaird then devolved on him. He was travelling on the Continent, both in 1859 and in the present year, instead of going to college. He was expected home in the course of this spring, and had just completed the tour of Sicily when, on going to Naples, he was seized with a violent attack of fever, which terminated fatally there on the 30th ult. in a few hours. The only relative who could reach him was his aunt, the Hon. Olivia Cecilia Laura Kinnaird, sister of Lord Kinnaird, who had been spending the winter in Italy, and had lately parted from him in Rome. He was accompanied in his tour by the Rev. R. Moorsom, son of Admiral Moorsom. The amiable and lamented youth was esteemed and beloved by all classes in his own neighbourhood; and his sad and early death has cast a deep and general gloom over all his connections and friends. Lord Kinnaird's now only surviving child is the Hon. Olivia Barbara Ogilvy, the wife of Reginald, eldest son of Sir John Ogilvy, Bart.

Death of Lady Audley.—We announce with regret the death of Lady Audley, which happened a few days since at Kensington, after a short illness. Her Ladyship was a daughter of the late eminent geographer, Sir Thomas Livingstone Mitchell, K.H., to whom the nation is so largely indebted for the exploration of the interior of Australia, and she was married in 1858 to George Edward, twentieth and present Lord Audley, by whom she has left two infant daughters—the latter born in Normandy only a few weeks since.

Death of Sir James Forrest, Bart.—This much-respected Edinburgh citizen died at Plymouth, on the 5th inst., in the 80th year of his age. He was Lord Provost of Edinburgh for six consecutive years, from 1837, and was made a Baronet at the time of the coronation, in 1838.

₊ A notice will be given next week of Jelinger Cookson Symons, Esq., Inspector of Schools, the well-known barrister and writer, who died on the 7th inst.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

Platinum.—M. H. Sainte-Claire Deville (so well known for his metallurgical researches, especially with respect to aluminium) and M. H. Debray have published in the Annales des Mines an elaborate paper on platinum and the metals which accompany it—osmium, ruthenium, palladium, and rhodium. The different states of these metals, the modes of fusing and volatilising them, their properties and their alloys, are amply discussed; while several plates show the construction of the furnaces and the apparatus employed in the experiments referred to in the memoir. A complete system is thus given for utilising the residues of platinum hitherto neglected, and, by means of new modes, for combining the metals with platinum.

The Cotton Trade of India forms the subject of a paper, by Mr. J. A. Mann, which appears in the new number of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. India is the accredited birthplace of the cotton manufacture, which is alluded to in the Rig-Veda, the sacred books of Brahmins, fifteen centuries before our era. Interesting details respecting the progress of the manufacture and the causes of its decay in the East are given, accompanied by statistical returns. Mr. Mann has sanguine hopes of the renovation of the cultivation of cotton in our Indian possessions.

The Origin of Species.—This vexed question, with which the scientific world is still so much agitated, is discussed in the fullest manner in the new number of the Edinburgh Review in an article of forty-six pages. A summary is given of Mr. Darwin's hypothesis, and his chief experiments are noticed; and, after considering the opinions of Buffon, Cuvier, Lamarck, Owen, Wallace, Agassiz, and other eminent naturalists, the writer, in conclusion, expresses his decided adhesion to the views of Cuvier, Owen, and Agassiz, in opposition to those maintained by Buffon, Lamarck, the "Vestiges," Baden Powell, and Darwin. An eloquent article on this subject, by M. Auguste Laugel, appears in the last number of the Revue de Deux Mondes. The writer favours Mr. Darwin's views, and hopes that their dissemination will be practically advantageous by favouring the acclimatisation of animals and plants.

Ozone.—M. Le Roux has laid before the French Academy of Sciences the following addition to the history of ozone, which is a modification of the oxygen in atmospheric air:—If a thin platinum wire be heated to whiteness by means of an electric current, and then placed beneath the nostrils, the heated ascending air will contain the peculiar odour by which philosophers recognise the presence of ozone. M. Le Roux describes apparatus suitable to the production of the phenomena.

Royal Institution. — The first number of the Proceedings for the present year is now being issued. It contains abstracts (written by the respective speakers) of the Friday evening discourses—by Professors Owen, Faraday, Tyndall, Huxley, Roscoe, Calvert; Dr. W. Carpenter; and Messrs. Field and Masters; and notices of proceedings at the general monthly meetings of the members.

The Voltaic Battery.—M. Du Moncel, at the meeting of the French Academy of Sciences, communicated a note on the effects which result from the incrustation of the porous vases employed in Daniell's battery, and endeavoured to demonstrate that these incrustations, far from being injurious to electrical development, are, on the contrary, favourable to it, by diminishing the interior resistance.—Compt.s Rendus.

Spheroidal Condition of Matter.—M. Boutigny d'Evreux, who delivered a lecture before the members of the Royal Institution, in 1852, on "The Spheroidal State of Liquids" when raised to a very high temperature, has laid before the French Academy a note in which he states that an erroneous impression of his researches has been formed respecting his views on the phenomena of the spheroidal state, which he does not believe to be peculiar to liquids, but to be common to all bodies. He cites camphor, wax, certain chlorides, iodine, &c., as examples.

The Solar Eclipse of 1860 (July 18).—The new number of the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society contains much useful information for gentlemen who contemplate visiting Spain for the purpose of observing the eclipse. The Astronomer Royal, as on the last occasion, gives many valuable hints respecting the most favourable localities for observation, the modes of transmitting instruments, the best routes for travellers, &c. He has also laid before the society a letter which he received from Don Antonio Aguilar, the Director of the Observatory at Madrid, who states that, in compliance with his request, the Spanish Government has made very liberal arrangements with the view of facilitating as much as possible the performance of its delicate responsibilities towards foreign astronomers who may come to the peninsula to observe the eclipse. Instruments are to be admitted free of duty, and the local authorities are to afford effectual assistance whenever required. Mr. R. C. Carrington gives an account of a new "Eyepiece for the Solar Eclipse," and also notes on a new design for vertically-placed divided circles, on the observations of the solar spots, &c.

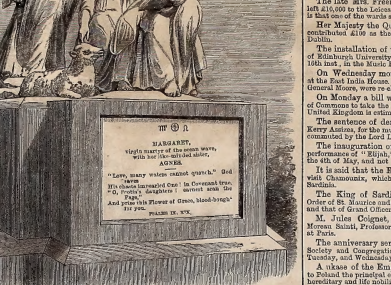
A New Sphygmograph (or pulse register) has been laid before the Philomathic Society of Paris by M. Marey. It is very portable, being only 18 centimetres long, and weighing 240 grammes. It is described in L'Institut, where diagrams are given of the different results obtained by the new instrument of M. Marey and the old one of Vierordt.

The Fabrication of Coke forms the subject of a long memoir in the Annales des Mines, by M. Dieudonné, the inspector of materials for the French railways "of the East." Coke-making establishments have been formed at Forbach and Hirschbach, near Metz. The paper contains a description of the apparatus there employed, illustrated by plates, and elaborate calculations of the expenses incurred.

An Arabic Quadrant constructed in A.D. 1334 is figured and described in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society by Mr. W. H. Morley, the society's librarian.

Boiling Points.—The determination of the boiling points, a subject of much difficulty in researches in organic chemistry, is discussed in some notes by Mr. A. Church which appear in the Chemical News.

Electricity and Sound.—How vibrations may be transmitted and reproduced at a distance by electricity is shown by the Abbé Laborde in a paper read before the French Academy, and printed in the last number of the Comptes Rendus.—In the Cosmos is contained some remarks by the Abbé Raillard on the reason why the sound of thunder is propagated in the air so much more rapidly than other sounds. The Abbé lays down the following propositions:—1. The electric spark of induction in the clouds shocks the air, and makes the noise; 2, every part of the luminous furrow is a centre of the shocks, that is to say, the air is shocked the whole length of the flash. If, then, we see a flash with an angle sufficiently great, we shall perceive that the sound proceeds from all parts of the flash, and follows all its windings. As the distance between the point of the flash nearest to the observer and that farthest from him attains sometimes to 25 kilometres (15½ miles), the rolling of the thunder produced by a discharge may endure for seventy-five seconds, which the Abbé says he has heard. He corroborates his views by quoting M. Biot.



Dust Storms and the Simoom.—At the last meeting of the Meteorological Society a paper was read on dust storms and dust columns, and the simoom, or poisonous wind, of India, by H. Cook, M.D. The author remarked that there are certain days in which, however hard and violently the wind may blow, little or no dust accompanies it, whilst at other times every little puff of air or current of wind raises up and carries with it clouds of dust, and at these times the individual particles of sand appear to be in such an electrified condition that they are even ready to repel each other, and are consequently disturbed from their position and carried up into the air with the slightest current. To so great an extent does this sometimes exist that the atmosphere is positively filled with dust, and, when accompanied by a strong wind, nothing is visible at a few yards, and the sun at noonday is obscured. This condition of the atmosphere is evidently accumulative: it increases by degrees until the climax is reached, when, after a certain time, usually about twenty-four hours, the atmosphere is cleared and equanimity is restored. Dust columns appear under a similar condition of electrical disturbance or intensity. On calm, quiet days, when hardly a breath of air is stirring, and the sun pours down his heating rays with full force, little circular eddies are seen to arise in the atmosphere near the surface of the ground. These increase in force and diameter, until a column is formed of great height and diameter, which usually remains stationary for some time, and then sweeps away across the country at great speed, and ultimately, losing the velocity of its circular movement, dissolves, and disappears. The author had seen in the valley of Mingochav, which is only a few miles across, and surrounded by high hills, on a day when not a breath of air stirred, twenty of these columns. These seldom changed their places, or but slowly moved across the level tract, and they never interfered with each other. The author then spoke of the simoom, that deadly wind, which occasionally visits the deserts of Cutchee and Upper Scinde, which is sudden and singularly fatal in its occurrence, invisible, intangible, and mysterious. Its nature, alike unknown (as far as the author is aware) to the wild, untutored inhabitant of the country which it frequents, as to the European man of science, its effects only are visible—its presence made manifest in the sudden extinction of life, whether of animal or vegetable, over which its influence has extended. The author gives the results of his information respecting the simoom as follows:—It is sudden in its attack; it is sometimes preceded by a cold current of air; it occurs in the hot months (usually June and July); it takes place by night as well as by day; its course is straight and defined; its passage leaves a narrow, "knifelike" track; it burns up or destroys the vitality of animal and vegetable existence in its path; it is attended by a well-marked sulphurous odour; it is described as being like the blast of a furnace, and the current of air in which it passes is evidently greatly heated; it is not accompanied by dust, thunder, and lightning.

COMMEMORATIVE STATUES AT STIRLING.

THE town of Stirling is geographically in the centre of Scotland; it likewise forms a centre in respect of those civil and military operations which for a course of centuries were carried on and ultimately won the independence of that kingdom. Abbey Craig, on which the national monument to Sir William Wallace is to be erected, stands fairly prominent in the carse or level plain by which Stirling is surrounded, and is about a mile and a half to the north-east. Stirling is built on a rock similar in formation to the Castle Rock of Edinburgh. The Castle surmounts the western brow of the hill, and, being built at various periods, it presents on every side a most striking and interesting appearance. Stirling Castle, from the hallowed history, it is believed, was a principal residence of the Scottish Jameses. It was the favourite abode of the chivalrous and poetical James I., and they especially occupied by his Royal successors till the reign of James Mary. The grounds on the Castle Hill, bounding the Castle on the south-east, were appropriate for chivalrous feats and courtly recreations. A portion of the plain was designated the Valley, and here tournaments were carried on in all the pomp of extraordinary splendour. Both the town and Castle of Stirling fell from their high renown on the union of the crowns. The Castle was untenanted, save by occasional companies of troops; and the vicinity of the Castle, associated with such memories, became a resort of loose and idle characters. In the days of superstition witches were burnt on the hill: the figgot's blaze consuming the hapless victims of popular prejudice rose high amidst scenes formerly beheld in proud magnificence by Scotland's noblest princes.

Till lately the Castle Hill of Stirling retained its degraded aspect which it had borne upwards of two centuries. Now all is changed—old barbarous feelings have been demolished, and a large portion of ground has been laid out as a cemetery and as pleasure grounds. These improvements were commenced about three years ago; and they have been followed with perseverance. Stirling is associated with the heroic deeds of the illustrious Wallace, the preaching of the celebrated John Knox, and the spirited enterprises of the other persons whose names are gratefully enrolled in the records of the national fame.

It was meet, in renovating the scenes of the Castle Hill, that some of those worthies should be commemorated. The idea was broached at an early period of the proceedings, and it has been carried out in a manner far surpassing what at first could have been contemplated, so that the town of Stirling may now proudly boast that no provincial community in the United Kingdom has done more fully to commemorate the national deeds of bygone age, and to exhibit the champions of the national liberties. On the Castle Hill have sprung up statues of John Knox, Alexander Henderson, Andrew Melville, James Guthrie, and Professor Erskine, and a group of statuary emblematic of the glorious struggle and the simple faith of Margaret Wilson. Many of these monumental statues have been erected by provincial shoemakers, but among them are many first-rate works of art, particularly by Mr. Handyside Ritchie, one of the most talented of the Edinburgh sculptors. The inauguration represents a marble group of Margaret Wilson and her sister Agnes. The former is reading the Scriptures with her younger sister Agnes, attended by their grandam and by their father, and contemplates the devotional earnestness of the two sisters, alike in affection and in grace. A lamb at their feet raises its head as if conscious of the gentle and guileless nature of the pair. Margaret Wilson was drowned in the Water of Bladnoch, Wigtonshire, for refusing to acknowledge James II. as having supreme spiritual authority over the Scottish Church. She is known in Scotland by the appellation of the Maiden Martyr. Besides the monuments which adorn the summit of the hill, others have lately been erected. A magnificent one in the form of a Greek temple has just been finished in honour of Ebenezer Erskine, the founder of the Secession Church, and whose ministrations were conducted on Stirling till the period of his death. Mr. Handyside Ritchie's noble colossal statue of Sir William Wallace is erected under an elegant porch in one of the principal streets, and in front of one of the public buildings. Mr. Handyside Ritchie received a gold medal at the Great Exhibition in 1851. It was purchased for its present position by Mr. Dunmore of Dunblane, Stirling, by whose munificence many of the recent improvements in the neighbourhood have been carried out, and who now expends the greater number of the memorial statues on the Castle Hill have been reared. Other improvements are in progress, and there are fewer places that can boast of having done so much in so little time for the kindred arts of sculpture and architecture as Stirling.

THE GRAND MILITARY STEEPLECHASES AT NORTHAMPTON.

IT is said that the late Duke of Wellington never refused leave of absence to any officers when they wanted to hunt or ride a steeplechase; and there is no wonder that the Army contains the finest horsemen its full quota of the finest across-country horsemen in Great Britain, and that once a year there have a great steeplechase contest. Nearly twenty years ago military steeplechases were held in Northamptonshire, when the renowned Meltonian, Sir David Baird, beat a field of some thirty horsemen, near Billing Wells. In 1846 the 9th was interviewed, Northamptonshire was described, and the scene was afterwards described to Warwick. Such was the interest felt in this annual contest that officers wrote home from the trenches before Sebastopol about it. From those deep ravines all living remembrance of the allied armies has disappeared, and in a few years more ages to come will tell where, side by side in sad array, many gallant hearts are cold that never mustered the gay jockey jacket, and rode so determinedly over the Lammas meadows. Brixworth was the next place where the race was selected for, and there were no removals to Brixhamlet; but the roving military mind has returned to its first love, and "the flag line" has been chosen in Northamptonshire once more. Although steeplechasing has flourished like a sort of exotic at Liverpool, the mideland counties are its real home. They first learned to do it from the Meltons struggling in Quorn's and Clacker's day, and then "The Marquis," with Cock Robin and "Lord Derby," was a far greater object of interest to them than even Mason on Lottery, Bocher on Vyvian, or Sefton on Moonraker.

Nearly fifty years ago, Northampton was the scene of a steeplechase over the estate of William Barry, Esq., of Wootton Hall, whose son and J. Mastaing, the publisher of Coventry Stakes, were in a sharp grass field, and there were, in fact, only three ploughed fields in the whole line, which included twenty fences, now and then very formidable, and a brook, which had to be crossed twice. The Grand Military Gold Cup was won by Captain Anderson, of the King's Dragoon Guards, on his horse Hornet. Eighteen started, and but few laughed at Captain Lindsay's (4th Light Dragoons) Marmion, who was second, not far again on 9th, better terms the next day, and just beat him by a head. Sir R. De Bourgh, of the Limerick Militia, also rode in the last race on the first day with his Premier, who was sold for 25gs. Owing to putting too much faith in the work of the food-posts by which to shape the course clear, and the folly of a number of horsemen who would ride with the contending horses, the sport was very much spoiled. This, however, will be rectified another year; and we also hear that the chasse will be thrown open to the Navy as well as the Army, and not confined to half-pay officers. Sailors are popularly supposed to ride with their faces to the tail, or "four on the deck at once," and hence there will be no little curiosity to see how the Naval Brigade will perform at such a cruise.

A plot of cottage property which has obstructed a full view of the majestic railway towers of Lancaster Castle is about to be removed.

SALMON-FISHING IN THE HIGHLANDS

EVERY nation has features and pursuits markedly its own which stamp the inhabitants with an unmistakable individuality, and it is certain that England is now, as it ever was, foremost in those athletic sports which give hardihood, nerve, and intrepidity to youth, prolong manhood, and lay the foundation of a happy old age. It is a love of national sports and pastimes which, engendered in the south and cherished and practised in manhood, sends forth our countrymen with sufficient confidence to contend with foes beneath the burning sun of India, or to struggle manfully in the cause of humanity and science in the regions of the frozen zone. So long as Englishmen shall have ball continue to await the titled youngster or wealthy commoner on his entry into the public school, so long as the cry of the hounds and the fox-hunter's horn shall have charms on our village green, so long as the lake and Cam echo to the measured stroke of the sturdy sight, and the young man's rod, rock or trolling, be first in his hand, so long shall we keep up to that physical condition which we now possess, and shall happily prolong the vitality and energy which repel the invasion of a foreign foe.

We shall not trouble our readers with an illustration of salmon-fishing in the Highlands. Salmon is the king of fresh-water fish, and lives in tidal rivers. The usual time of spawning is about the latter end of August or beginning of September. The salmon, having deposited their spawn in the river, invariably hasten to the sea before the approach of winter, whence in the following summer they again return to the rivers. The spawn deposited in summer in the following spring becomes smelts, about the size of a gudgeon, and these take their departure to the sea, and very rapidly increase in size. Ten years is supposed to be the maximum age to which a salmon can attain. But come we now to salmon-fishing. "Go thou, gentle cockney, and angle in the New River, but not Highland salmon; put a tiny coat into and call Tay!" So says Professor Wilson, in his "Recreations of Christopher North," evidently, as he writes with full reminiscence of hopes of sport, and with a keen appetising recollection of youthful days. And what better, pray, can we do than accept his invitation, and follow in the wake of the "straight and unswerving" salmon, as the savage spirit of sport, is springing over rock ledge after rock-ledge, and leaping as he goes through the white and boiling brine through river-feeding torrents, to the glorious music of his running and ringing reel, after a tongue-hooked salmon, leaping and shaking with the tide—but not the rain—in the "sweet waters of the sea." Let us take note of the twenty feet rod, all ring-casting and spliting the air with unswerving vertical, from 10 to 60 ft; a fashionable tapper, "fine by degrees, and beautifully less;" and let us further be aware that the "gentle craft" is fair, and not foul play, as a present moment full of fear, and must be made to spring to the plunging stone. Now fallen, or "nodding" with true practice, the stone also shoots out of the foam like a bar of silver bullion; and, rebuking into the flood, is in another moment at the very head of the waterfall "fine bull's the bull!" and now the gaff—and the fish is gone for ever with the thunder into ten fathoms deep." But the tackle is equal to the struggle, and the result is "a snow-white, wards, right up the middle of the main current of the hill-born river, as if his sword in the very course where she was spawned. She still swims swift and strong and deep, and there is yet another round to play in her dorsal fin, danger in the flap of her tail," and the gut may yet be shattered against a rock by her silver shoulder. There is no impediment or obstruction now; the lesser waterfalls are level with the flood; the bare rocks and floating trees have all been swept during the night down to the salt loch. She begins to fail now; the bulk falls over to the right in delivered. "What! another mad leap! yet another glorious plunge!" and now, if the rod will skip, "with curving horns, kicking heels, and straight-up tail," comes bellowing by bottom-set fishermen and the river, all in fear to his escape honour. Suicide to take place as seven if the fish be lost at six. His will is inevitably, whereby the Pounding Pot and the Thunder Tunnel are to be richer by ten thousand pounds a-piece. But no; the fish is lying languidly afloat on the foam as if all further assistance now were vain, and she was carefully marshalled into the creels. Yet, even as the angler feels a desire to fondly kiss her silver side, she leaps in her last trial of her tail, and all reel is now revolving once again. Nay, to, ever, though a stern chase is a long chase, Peter is about to have the gaff, and the fish is in the meshes of the professor, "into the eddy she sails, sick, and slow, and almost with a swirl, whitening as she nears the sand—there she has it, struck right into the shoulder, falter! has failed! Up, Peter, Minerva, or Venus, and has at last in all her glorious length and breadth of beauty to pray for mercy or be dragged angling before the Flood!

Such, then, is salmon-fishing in the Highlands, and such is the sport depicted by our artist. The young laird is seen, after a long run, anxiously watching his attendant, an old experienced fisherman, who is about to wade with the gaff the now exhausted fish, while, Sandy, the servant, looks from behind his master with a wondering admiration at the lovely vision in his master's creels. In the still hush of evening, with the setting sun casting its declining beams on the purple mountains, and the gaily stirring trees which are now and reflected in the calm water, the scene is very lovely; and it is such a scene that our artist has represented. The healthy exercise and natural wholesome excitement with the subsequent repose, will no doubt produce so unmistakable a proof of your fisherman's skill and perseverance in a full fair salmon, is such as induce many to follow so gratifying a sport.

A COOL CORNISH MINER.—Some years ago a party of Cambridge gentlemen were visiting the celebrated tin-mining district of the west depths of Wheal Fortune Mine. The venerable Professor Farish, who made the tour, was induced to relate with much humour the following startling incident of his visit. On his ascent in the ordinary manner by means of the ladders, and while a mere speck of daylight, he perceived, as he thought, certain unmistakable symptoms of frailty in the rope. He therefore shouted to his guide to stop, and to the miner above, whom but halfway from the bottom of the awful abyss. "We change these ropes yesterday," replied the miner, "and I'm sure there's no need to change this one to morrow if we get up safe!"

LONDON BY DAY AND BY NIGHT.—To estimate rightly the increase and changes which are taking place in London, it is desirable occasionally to look back upon the many years of comparative stagnation which preceded and the metropolis at different periods. We have opened a map, dated 1807, of the district which now stands between the Regent's Park and the row of houses and public buildings. If we compare it with what we know of the district in 1860, we shall see what the circumstances have altered. Eastward our map extends to Little Tunstile, on the south side of the city by way of Holborn. Passing along this road westward, we come to a cross lane which is now represented by King-street, running northward, and another of Long Lane, which is now Little Queen-street. Proceeding footpath through the fields, at the corner of Great Queen-street, just where the printing-office of Messrs. Bell and Watson now stands. Lincoln's Inn-fields are marked, and are crossed by footpaths. The map does not extend far to the north of Holborn, but Gray's-inn-road and Hatton-garden appear as lane in the map passes across Drury-lane, and continues to St. Martin's-lane; this is the line of Castle-street. South of the Strand we have the Convent Garden. The details from this to the Strand are not filled in. Further south we discover "The Mews" at the corner of Charing-cross, and going north to the junction of the Broad-street of St. Giles's, and we see St. Martin's-lane, Long-acre, and Drury-lane, with Hyde Park-corner called Tothill-street, and the Oxford-road. Passing up St. Martin's-lane, we find the Cock and Pie Fields, now covered with, the swarming dwelling, and not too fastidious population of the Seven Dials. A red brick along the side of a wall from St. Martin's-lane to Broad-street, St. Giles's. This is marked Le-lane, but became Monmouth-street. Beyond the fence is the picturesque little church, St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, with one or two houses close by imbedded in trees. Northward the green fields are interrupted by several paths, one of which is now represented by a side of Bloomsbury-square. Eastward from St. Giles's, but a little to the west of the present Museum, in the midst of gardens, is the Foundling Hospital. From this scene of the streets became less noticeable. So houses appear on the site of Marylebone, and New Road, and the whole of Somers-town and St. Giles's.—Builder.

CORINNA.—The key move to Enigma No. 1128 is 1. Kt to B 3rd. Thanks for the game; the defence, however, detracts very much from its interest. What hope of winning could B. take somebody after such a move as his 6th?

And White resigns the game and the match.

Notes by one of the Combatants.

(a) As a rule an early exchange of Queens is to be shunned on both sides. It is sound, however, in this instance, as it relieves White from a cramped game.

(b) If White had played 24. P to K B 4th, Black would have replied with 24. R takes K P (ch).

(c) Black's game is now irretrievably lost.

(d) The advance of this Pawn, although apparently a strong move, is proved unsound by the subsequent play of Black, and is not to be recommended.

(e) It will be found that the Queen is a better move at command.

(f) The termination is an imposing lesson in Pawn play.

The score at the conclusion gave—

CHESS TOURNEY IN PARIS.—A chess tournament is now going on at the Café de la Régence which excites a spirited emulation. Forty-six players of various degrees of force have entered their names, and have been classified according to their strength in the five categories of combatants. The players in the first list give to those in the second, the Pawn and move; to those in the third, the Pawn and two moves; to the fourth, the Knight; and to the fifth, the Rook—the same proportion being observable in the subsequent lists. The names in the period when we left Paris were those of MM. Lequesne, Kolisch, Diedler, De Rivière, Martin Saint Leon, Durand, and Goffard. These competitors have to play against each other, and the result will probably be communicated next week.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

(SECOND NOTICE.)

IN landscape we are delighted to notice two or three performances which show a decided advance upon the ordinary run of goods manufactured for the exhibition market—works, indeed, which indicate talent of a sort to add considerably and permanently to the strength of our landscape school.

Beginning with Mr. Vicat Cole, there is something remarkably distinct and apart from the beaten track of pretty view-paintings about his grand, our exhibition walls and Academic Arcadian privileged. Mr. Vicat Cole, with characteristic boldness, has chosen a subject of great difficulty, and has treated it with a success which proves the constituents of the beautiful and the picturesque in landscape a truthful following of the features before him, but with a subjective mode of treatment, showing the supremacy of Art over Nature's self, even in her grandest forms and moods; general breadth of treatment, and simplicity and scale the grandeur of which is attained with a minute realisation of the forms and colours of prominent objects, which have combined to make the most curious effects. In the foreground is a wide, undulating field of corn, ripe for the sickle, and the reapers are bending down to their work. In the far distance the gentle rattle as the serried mass waves to and fro in the wind comes breeze. A few poppies and other wild flowers scattered here and there interrupt the stubble of the part already cut, and the stubble itself, and the heavily-laden waggon which stands in the midst, are all executed with wonderful truthfulness. Without time to make too much of, so as to distract the attention from the more important features of the composition. Immediately behind this rich corn-field is a fine rising sweep of wooded ground, broken here and there by open spaces covered with sward, the rich green of which gratefully relieves the eye after looking on the golden tone of the foreground; and far away in the extreme distance we trace a broad, distant view, with a glimpse of water, and a village, and bounded by a bold range of hills, the intervening sky being partially flooded with a bright sunlight, which increases in intensity as it recedes from the eye and rises into the higher grounds. The whole is all in its parts, this picture is no less commendable for the fine keeping which pervades it. Cottages near Alnwick, by Lowry (102), is a small picture of a different character, but which evinces a love for rural scenery and truthfulness to Art. In the broad, massive towers of the castle stand on a projecting point of an ironbound, rocky shore, here guarded by water. A stormy sky is raging, and the jagged, strand is strewed with portions of wreck, whilst a disabled vessel is rapidly drifting to her doom. Parts of the rocks are filled with figures in action, attempting by rude assistance to the wreck, or making salvage of the debris which has come ashore; and the whole presents a very perspective, both linear and aerial, give a fine depth to the canvas. The sea, tested by a furious breeze, boils and foams in numberless white patches interspersed with masses of foam and spray, which give a cold and sinister light to the dull and dismal scene. Some of these cold passages are relieved by the introduction of a small touch of colour in the drapery of the figures, or for other occasions; and the dark, cloudy sky, with its broad and partially cast off by the masts and spars of the wrecked vessel; in the management of all which indicate the artist has the judgment and the discrimination of a master. Without instituting comparisons with any one, we may aver of this picture that, taken as a whole, we know of no living artist who would have painted it better. "On the Lugano, North Wales" (470), by the same artist, is a smaller landscape, and of a different character, showing a broader treatment of masses, with less &c. It has all the appearance of a truthful transcript from nature, and is admirable in its parts; but the effect is cold, and altogether it wants the action and poetry involved in the other picture.

E. Tennant is still faithful to his native Welsh scenery, of which he presents us nine specimens, all painted in his usual and attractive manner. But his colour, too uniformly delicate, on some occasions, becomes monotonous, and the eye wanders up at each scene with a pleasurable feeling and an eye to quiet beauty, he seems rather to require the more vigorous suggestions for mind effects which the wild mountain passes he delights to explore might offer under the coolness vicissitudes of atmospheric influence. "The Windings of Aber Glaslyn, North Wales," Pass, the scene of Capdala Crawshay" (190), is in itself a most pleasing and suggestive subject, which the artist has most successfully rendered. "Llyn Idwal, from the Pitchdge" (203), with effect of sun and rain, affords opportunities of a higher order, as compared to the full tame of the preceding two. "Scene on the Usk, between Llangynidr and Buckland, Brecon" (338), is a charming view; but most of all to our taste is the "Distant View of Llanberis, from the Road by Penllechog Mountain" (405), with a shady road debouching upon the foreground, from which a cart is emerging.

E. Boddington exhibits "A Fishing Weir on the Thames" (76), painted somewhere in the neighbourhood of Park, the artist's locality he belongs, and who have made the Thames their own. He has also three other minor landscapes, of a sketchy character, which display considerable talent.

J. P. Pettit presents us with a very fierce "Sunset" (174), burning up a clump of trees in the distance, in which there appears to be evident contrivance. "At Montereau, Lake of Geneva" (321), is a somewhat similar subject to the last picture, painted in a cool tone, and with a most satisfactory result. Some views in Wales—eternal Wales—complete the lists of this artist's contributions.

Norman, who has a very effective landscape (No. 14) hung almost after effect; but, unfortunately, too generally through the medium of a certain conventional tone which destroys the true elements of aerial perspective, which might almost be called "trick." Now, nothing can be more simple and consequent success of effect than repeating it too often, by which the eye of the vulgar, at first dazzled with the effect produced, becomes at length initiated into the secret of its production.—"A Cornish Cove" (24), Scene on Eglon Moors, Yorkshire" (17), is eminently amenable to these reflections. "Carisbrooke Castle" (74) is a picture of a higher order of harmony of colour and a broader treatment of light and shade.

We shall have occasion to visit the landscape department on a future occasion.

F. Noble has nine little subjects of genre and pièces de circonstance, some of which display considerable cleverness and point, whilst others are not so satisfactory. "The Young Agriculturist" (97) is a boy playing with a box of mathematical instruments on the corner of a farm-yard. Well painted in many respects; but why that thoughtful brow, and pale, sickly complexion? "Solitude" (173) is represented as a stout young lady in satin skirt and black bodice, reclining full length on a sofa, and in a room upon a green sofa. The figure is turning her back, in a not very gracious or graceful manner upon society. We cannot admire this performance, which was known in the Academy exhibition as "Cast off." "Cast a Clout" is conceived in the spirit of broad humour, with questionable success. One of the children brigade is hanging the head of a goat, for want of something better to do, and mightily amused at it. "The Rendezvous" (151) represents a Cavalier of about the Stuart period standing in a secluded spot in a wood with a drawn sword, waiting for the adversary who has challenged him to deadly fight. He wears a chivalrous bearing and a defiant air which tell very well.

W. Bromley exhibits a clever bit of nature in the group of two boys fishing in a narrow bend of water, in a delicious, shady dell, one of whom has "Caught a Bush" (218).

"Playing with Fire" (220), by Mrs. Bowler, though unpretending in size, and modestly hung, strikes us as original and clever.—A

A group of "Family Portraits" (253), by S. Amicont, has an imposing appearance, and throws into shade all other attempts at portraiture in the room. We cannot but envy the happy family who are the actors in the dignified little at home episode here so ingeniously presented. The commanding elegance and high tone of the lady, the elegant assiduity of the husband, who from behind the sofa draws her attention to a passage in a book, and the charming play fulness of the two well-dressed children, form a fascinating tableau of, we trust, in this case, everyday life, though not met by us every day, and the effect of which is heightened rather than depressed by the mystic chiaroscuro in which it is invested.

H. L. Roils, who na ong made himself lord of the fancy tribe, and whom few can equal in depicting them, has two capital dishes of fish on this occasion—"A Study of Trout" (128) and "From the Thames" (617).

T. Earl has some very creditable specimens of animal life, painted with great naturalness, and a good eye for textural truth; amongst the rest, "Deer and Deer-hound" (105), and "Dogs and Partridge" (275).

Amongst the still-life subjects—which, happily, do not particularly abound—F. D. Ward exhibits some "Fruit, with Bird's-nest" (64), a group of various objects, in which the bloom of the plum, the crispness of the dried leaves, and the perfect accuracy of the roundness of the eggs, would delight Mr. Ruskin.

"THE SHADOW ON THE WALL." BY T. ROBERTS.

MUCH as we admire the truthful and impressive character of some of Mr. Roberts' more serious subjects—his "Telegram," for instance, lately printed in colours for this Journal, and his "Flower on the Window-sill," the pet plantation and only solace of the little pensive sempstress who dwells in that upper room, in that densely-crowded court (a picture included in this year's Suffolk street Exhibition)—we like him still better in simpler, playful subjects, like the one before us. In his capital group we have boys as they are, without alloy, without any of that infusion of sentiment which so many artists, both of the English and the French school, seem to consider necessary to give effect to their juvenile creations—boys, we say, when they grow to manhood, will be valuable additions to the industry and the defences of the country. Here, in an humble corner of a carpenter's shop, which is in all the admirable disorder which a brief suspension of labour would suggest, two young lads are intently engaged investigating the mysteries of the "Rabbit-on-the-Wall" performance. The elder lad seems unready to have acquired that complete mastery of hand which is essential for the purpose, and looks as delighted and proud of his achievement as if he had accomplished the quadrature of the circle, or carried off a double first class at Oxford. The face of the younger lad is equally striking by the intent earnestness and the quiet satisfaction depicted in it. The attitudes of both boys are natural and easy, and display admirable drawing; whilst a pleasant harmony of colour is produced by the grey-green and russet frocks in which they are dressed. The various implements and incidents of the carpenter's shop, down to the very chips and shavings which strew the floor, are executed with paint-taking detail and perfect accuracy in texture and colour, but without being forced into undue prominence.

'NO LONGER BABY."

BY W. HEMSLEY.

MR. Hemsley here hits off an amusing little passage in nursery life, the truth of which will be recognised by "parents and guardians." The new baby has ousted the penultimate baby—now "no longer baby"—from his place of honour on mamma's lap, and is the engrossing object of all solicitude from he mother, and of unbounded admiration from the elder brother, who grins at its little antics. The contrast between this good-humoured boy and the discontented urchin in the front, who in his ill-temper has kicked off one of his shoes and socks is in itself a picture. The expression of the mother is, perhaps, a little tame, but it comes in well as a sort of middle tint, holding the more demonstrative passages judiciously in keeping. The group, taken as a whole, is a most effective one, full of spirit and humour, and it is admirably wrought out in the details. It is now exhibiting at the Suffolk-street Gallery.

"THE LESSON ON THE FLAGEOLET."

BY EDOUARD F. FRÈRE.

THIS little picture (in the present year's French Exhibition) is one of the most pleasing examples of M. Frere's "Scenes of Humble Life," a field which he has made entirely his own, and in which he displays invention which would seem inexhaustible, and a versatile fancy happily appreciative of every shade of character and incident. Though he adopts the whole range of humble life as his sphere of action, childlife is that in which he most delights—boyhood, in all its various phases, he seizes upon with the promptitude and exact truth of a photograph, insomuch that each creation seems actually to breathe before us, unconscious of having been made the subject of a picture. Indeed, the naturalness and total absence of affectation and make-up which we see in his little urchins are the highest charm of his pencil, and place him a wide way apart from all other painters of similar subjects. And yet, withal, there is a dash of sentiment infused into the faces and demeanour of his little heroes which at once interests us in their behalf, and—though avowedly all of the most every-day class—singles them out from amongst the common herd to be observed and remembered.

The little flageolet-player, perched on a high chair, his feet resting on the middle bar, is a perfect study of an enthusiast wholly engrossed with one gift, one sense. His downward gaze is riveted to the vesicles of the little instrument, which, with protruding mouth, slightly distended cheeks, uplifted finger instinct with life and feeling, he is making "discours most eloquent music." His younger brother, who, with hat thrown carelessly back, and hands crossed behind his back, leans against the wall, and looks and listens in wonderment and delight, is a no less admirable figure in its way, and all once gives a dramatic character to the scene. The drawing exhibits perfect freedom of handling, combined with the most delicate finish, and the colouring is tender and harmonious.

M. Frere was a pupil of Paul Delaroche. He received the third-class medal in genre in 1851, the second-class medal, and the third-class medal at the Universal Exhibition of 1855, and was created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in November, 1858.

"THE OPERA BOX."

BY WM. BROMLEY.

THERE is a great deal of unpretending merit about Mr. Bromley's works, particularly in his little groups from real life, in which he often displays a happy choice of subject. "The Opera Box," exhibited at the British Institution, presents us with two young ladies in the upper classes of society enjoying their favourite recreation at the Opera. They are apparently sisters, but of a somewhat dissimilar turn of mind. The one with a gay wreath of flowers round her head is of a high-spirited and joyous temperament, treading lightly, and with equanimity, undisturbed through the most trying passages of life, and meeting the most agonising passages of "Lucrezia Borgia" or "Lucia di Lammermoor" with an unconcerned smile. Her sister, whose coiffure is less exigeé, has a brow slightly tinged with "the pale cast of thought," and, with eye full of expression riveted on the scene, drinks in each eloquent melody with a rapt ardour. The artist has made a most pleasing picture out of an every-day occurrence, and has painted all honestly and well.

Mr. W. Bromley is the son of John Bromley, the celebrated engraver, and the brother of F. Bromley, who himself follows that profession. He was a few days ago elected a member of the Incorporated Society of British Artists.

THE POST OFFICE AND THE PRESS.

A NATIONAL post office is one of the most powerful instruments of civilisation. It is the great conquerer of isolation. By its agency the most distant communities are brought into close union; and, if its wonderful action is not duly appreciated, it is simply because we are familiar with its machinery. The constant efforts made to improve its organisation and extend its usefulness are the best testimonies to its surpassing value, which consists in celerity, certainty, cheapness, and amplitude in the range of its operations. It appears from the Sixth Report of the Postmaster-General, which has just been published, that the distance over which mails are now conveyed within the United Kingdom is about 140,000 miles per day; nor is there an inhabited locality on the globe which does not participate, in a greater or less degree, in the advantages afforded by the British Post Office. This magnificent institution is not only self-sustaining, but yields a considerable revenue to the Government. The gross return in money for postage from the United Kingdom amounted, in 1859, to £3,197,258; adding to this commissions on money orders, the total receipts were £3,313,675. The gross expenditure in the same year was £1,926,905. The difference between these sums, did not exceptional circumstances intervene, would give the net profit of the establishment at £1,386,772; but, as the year 1859 comprises fifty-three weeks in the last returns, and embraces some other irregularities, the actual profit is reduced to £1,135,960. This is an enormous gain, if we estimate the percentage relatively to the outlay. No purely mercantile establishment would desire more lucrative customers than the writers and receivers of letters have proved to be to the Post Office, and it may at least be demanded that no unwise economy should deprive the public of the postal facilities to which they are entitled. It has, indeed, been contended that postal revenue ought never to figure on the credit side of the national balance-sheet; that it cannot legitimately be brought within the category of taxes, or calculated upon as swelling the funds of the public treasury. It should stand apart entirely disconnected from the ordinary operations of finance and the items of a Chancellor's Budget. Its profits ought to be applied to itself for its own special purposes. In the United States parsimony in the conveyance of letters and newspapers is wisely repudiated, and there the expenditure always exceeds the receipts, the mail being carried through districts thinly populated; but the deficit is not treated as a loss, but regarded in the nature of a subsidy or advance with a view to postponed benefit, and is justified by the policy of creating trade, through giving facilities for its rise, growth, and expansion. Thus, American statesmen have attempted, and successfully, to avoid the evils of overcrowding; to encourage, as it were, home colonies; to reclaim the wilderness, and create new townships in the Far West. Under such views the Post Office has never been employed as a fiscal instrument for collection of revenue, but as an agent for the diffusion of trade, penetrating lakes, glens, and woods, and stimulating production through the creation of new markets in districts where none could have been in existence except on a very limited scale had the transmission of letters and newspapers been denied. They have carried these operations as far west as the thinly-settled frontier hardware on the Indian territory, while the overland Californian mail route, 2700 miles in length, unites New York with San Francisco.

Some new regulations for the conduct of our Post Office will be submitted to Parliament during the present Session, probably within the course of the ensuing week, and those to which we desire to call attention refer to a new tariff on newspapers. The object is clearly to add to the Post Office revenue, which, as we have shown already, yields a profit of fifty per cent on the expenditure. It is proposed to charge their transmission by weight, treating them as mere merchandise, without regard to their peculiar mission or contents. The scale recommended by Sir Rowland Hill is 1d. per four ounces, 1½d. for six ounces, and 2d. for eight ounces—thus neutralising in a great degree the benefit expected from the repeal of the paper duty, so that, should this measure be carried, which we cannot anticipate, Parliament will actually stultify its own decrees, and the executive Government will come into conflict with one of its own departments. The enlargement of a journal printed on good paper necessarily adds to its weight, but in no appreciable degree adds to the cost or difficulty of its transmission by the mail. The new duties would not require of the officials, requires no augmentation of the staff, does not demand more locomotive power than is used at present, ampler space in the conveyance carriages, or accelerated velocity, for the proportion is relatively inconsiderable between the two conditions. But were it otherwise an extra charge would not be justifiable—first, because a post office is not a legitimate fiscal agent of general revenue; secondly, because a Government which annually votes enormous sums to improve the metropolis without gross inconsistency, treat the vehicles of knowledge as a common brown-paper parcel. We have every respect for the Legislature; but it may be doubted whether the speeches delivered in Parliament are more conducive to the mental culture of the people than the various knowledge circulated by the newspapers, nor must it be forgotten that those very speeches are only made known beyond the walls of Parliament by the periodical press. We can foresee nearly where the increase of the Parliamentary food would surely amount to a negation of all legislative wisdom.

It is a very idle fear that newspapers will ever exceed their present dimensions and weight. Most of them have a hard struggle to exist, and not a few are certain to end in pecuniary loss with a speculative hope of future success—a hope founded on the chapter of accidents. Moreover, the repeal of the paper duty, by multiplying their number, will have the effect of curtailing the circulation of each, and thereby of creating competition with the cheap press of the ordinary size. To raise the postage exceptionally on the two or three new existing which exceed any prescribed weight would be invidious and unjust, as it would amount practically to ex post facto law, while the purchasers would be injured if, to escape the higher assessment, an inferior article were offered in the shape of flimsy paper—an expedient which would deprive the Post Office of its expected profit. The scheme, therefore, proposed would amount practically to a premium for the publication of trash. Every incentive to improvement would be blunted, as energy would be fined for its exertion, while the sluggish and careless would be indirectly favoured. But we are not so unreasonable as to expect that newspapers should be served without paying for the service rendered. Their value is, of course, enhanced by the facilities afforded for their transmission, and for that in all equity they should give an equivalent. No objection, therefore, is offered to the principle of paying, but to the new rate recommended. Instead of a standard of four ounces for a penny, let it be simply raised to five ounces for a penny, and let the half-penny rate for fractions of an ounce be altogether abandoned, so that, if we may use gros gousy for gros gousy, the present 4*d.* for six ounces would be tuopence. Such a scale would bring the newspaper and book post into harmony. Among the changes proposed is the withdrawal of the old privilege of retransmission during fifteen days after publication. A free transit in any direction during that time a newspaper is posted. This measure has a tendency to limit the circulation of the best-informed journals, the price of which, on account of the marked superiority of their columns, is necessarily higher than that of mere corporate organs. It is a contest of brains or of three pence to subscribe for this class of periodicals, and send them to each other after perusal by the post This arrangement will, of course, terminate with the cessation of the privilege of retransmission, and will most seriously injure those papers which are printed on the best material, and therefore weigh the most. To them, therefore, some compensation is due on this score; and it would be equitably awarded by the amended scale of postage which we have recommended in opposition to the new tariff embodied in the scheme of Sir Rowland Hill.

The policy of legislation should always be in harmony with itself. This rule has been observed since Protection was abandoned and Free Trade recognised as the true one for more than a year by customs duties checking production and limiting consumption have been repealed. In regard to what are popularly known as taxes on knowledge a corresponding rule has been followed. The stamp duty on paper from 7*d.* to 4*d.*, the small stamp duty was reduced, and then surrendered; in the next stage the stamp wholly disappeared; and now the excise duty on paper is abolished. All these several measures, though gradually and cautiously introduced, were directed to the final object—the emancipation of periodical literature from fiscal fetters. The public and the Legislature acknowledged that newspapers were among the most efficient organs of education, penetrating in all directions, and acting as vehicles of instruction. That principle was perceived as moral agents, not only for the good they directly conferred on society, but also for the evil they prevented through the dread of exposure. It was felt that their circulation should be encouraged, and hence the Legislature removed all the restrictions by which ignorance had stunted its growth. The repeal of the paper duties has loosened the last links of the chain by which it was enslaved. Will it, then, be consistent with the wise course of policy, after its triumph over the most powerful opposition, to restrain the full freedom now conceded by fresh limitations imposed by the Post Office? Of what avail is liberty of printing without liberty of transmission? Keeping the grand object in view—that of extending the intelligence of society—we justify the hand in marring the design of the right hand? The Post Office has an ample revenue already, nor is it to be regarded as a fiscal institution, like the Customs or Excise. Its true use is that of a wholesome, sharpening that with which it comes into contact, itself incapable of cutting. It is the grand vehicle of communication and interchange of thought, to whatever thought can be applied. It is at once and the same time the voice, the eye, the ear of the whole community, morally, intellectually, and commercially. It is an immense central reservoir, from which fertilising stream gush forth to irrigate the whole country. Regarded from this point of view, no nation has every reason to be satisfied if the Post Office can sustain its own machinery in effective working order; it should not be called upon to contribute to the support of any other department of the State; and most assuredly it will militate against its chief usefulness if it strays itself against the printing-machine, limits the diffusion of knowledge, checks the progress of education, and neutralises the elevated and elevating designs of the Legislature.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Princess Mathilde gave a brilliant soirée on Thursday se'nnight, which the Emperor and Empress honoured with their presence.

The Moniteur of Sunday published a decree reducing by one centimètre the minimum height required for service.

A despatch of M. Thouvenel, dated the 15th ult., addressed to the German Courts, entirely repudiates the revolution attributed to the word "revendiquer" in the Emperor's speech, and expressly limits its application to the "new fact" of the extension of Piedmont beyond the Alps, and to the annexation of Savoy.

The Constitutionnel denies the existence of direct negotiations between France and Switzerland on the question of the neutralised district of Savoy, and adds that the negotiations are only between the Powers who signed the treaties of Vienna. The Constitutionnel is also of the last Swiss note in the most angry terms, and indeed in language which, if taken as authoritative, would almost imply that France no longer holds the high point of honour and generosity with Switzerland. The Opinion Nationale agrees with the Constitutionnel that the Swiss note would "justify" the French Government in taking offence. The notion that the Emperor can possibly think of exercising any compulsion upon the free electors of Savoy as to their suffrage is a fresh upon the Government prints as fearfully offensive.

SAVOY AND NICE.

General de Beaufort d'Hautpoul has been appointed Chief Commissioner for France for settling the new frontier line of Savoy and Nice. The work will be commenced immediately after the completion of the census, which is now accomplishing the annexation.

The Corriere Mercantile of Genoa says:—"The frontier of the second-class fortress of Nice will be traced in such a manner as to leave Ventimiglia and Scapello to Piedmont. Ventimiglia is celebrated for its olive oil, and Scapello for its wine, both from Nice. If this be the key of the frontiers remains to Piedmont, it is probable that the division line will pass by La Turbia. La Turbia is a little village on a high mountain, on the road to Roman station, is situated on the plateau of a chain of mountains, to the left of which is Nice, and to the east Monaco and Mentone, disputed possessions of the Sardinian. In fixing the limits at La Turbia, France will lose nothing, for between this place and Nice there is no fortress, and the Piedmontese, as Charles III. of Monaco. La Turbia is the sole place by which the chain of mountains can be conveniently crossed. It is for that reason that Napoleon I. had commenced the construction of a fortress to be constructed there. The passage could easily be fortified on the modern plan."

M. Lally Tollendal, the Envoy at Turin and Baron Ricasoli signed given in the evening by the Governor of Annecy a toast was drunk to the Emperor and to the King of Sardinia, and to the Viceroy of the Governor's house, and read a despatch announcing that the Emperor and Empress will visit Savoy in May or June next. Several toasts were drunk.

The voting (by ballot) on the question of annexation to France took place on Thursday and Friday. The Gazette de Savoie gives the following as the definitive result of the voting in the city of Nice—

Yes, 6615; No, 260; Spoiled votes, 1. Total, 6876. Twelve votes were lost, and preceded by drums and colours. Voting tickets in favour of annexation to France, and bearing the inscription "Yes," were attached to their hats by the electors.

SWITZERLAND.—A EUROPEAN CONGRESS.

The Federal Council of Berne has issued another note to the great Powers representing that Switzerland has not entered into any bargain with Piedmont in regard to the cession of Savoy. The history of late Russia with the other Powers who have signed the treaties of 1815, and have assumed the neutrality and inviolability of Switzerland. In this note the Prince also states that it is the true political interest of Europe to preserve Switzerland in its present integrity. But France has not manifested an intention of negotiating either with the great Powers or with the Swiss Confederation, and the Federal Council expressly declares that it will not justify the most complete adhesion to the assembling of a Conference, being convinced that the Federal Council does not desire to intervene officiously ensure the neutrality of Switzerland.

The answers of England, Prussia, and Austria to notes from the Swiss Government have been given.

M. Thouvenel has informed the representatives of the Powers who signed the Treaty of Vienna of the nature of the proposals which will give to the circular note of the Swiss Federal Council of the 24th ult. respecting the annexation of Savoy and Switzerland. It was not until the King of Sardinia had formally taken possession of Lombardy and had realised the Italian Confederation that satisfied that French and Austria jointly addressed an invitation to the Powers who had signed the treaties of Vienna to assemble in a Conference, in order to decide upon all those provisions of those treaties which had resulted from the cession of Lombardy to Piedmont, which cession was freely approved by Europe. No Power has refused this invitation. France will now follow the same course. When, therefore, the cession of Savoy and Nice to France shall be concluded, there will be no room for doubt and ratified by universal suffrage of the inhabitants, and by the vote of the Sardinian Parliament, France will not be possessed of those provinces by any title which can satisfy the consent to the assembling of a Conference for the purpose of receiving communications from the Swiss Government. The 24th of March last between Napoleon III. and King Victor Emmanuel. France will likewise be willing that the same Conference should receive the following question:—In what manner are the rights of France, irrevocably acquired through the cession of Savoy and Nice by the King of Sardinia, to be reconciled with the guarantees given by the Powers of treaties in favour of Switzerland?—It being well understood that the Conference will not be competent to deal with the Federal Pact.

England, it is stated, proposes Brussels as the place where the Congress should be held, while France insists upon Paris, in which she is supported by Russia.

ITALY.

UPPER AND CENTRAL ITALY.

The Senate of Turin, in its sitting of the 14th, voted the address in reply to the King's Speech (Count Casa d'Oscarty of Nice) for the annexation of Tuscany was then passed by 70 ayes to 2 noes. That for the annexation of the Romilian provinces met with somewhat more opposition, the numbers being 51 for and 21 against.

General Garibaldi, in an interpellation made in the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on Thursday week, again brought the subject of Nice before the House. He affirmed that the voting of Nice would be effected under the compression of foreign troops. Count di Cavour, the Piedmontese Government of Nice as attacking the liberty of the vote, and concluded by proposing the adjournment of the vote to a later period, in order to guarantee the free action of the day, implying disapprobation of the conduct of the Government, the following ordre du jour was adopted by a majority:—"The Chamber hoping that Government will maintain the constitutional guarantees, and efficaciously provide for the liberty of the vote in Savoy, passes to the order of the day." Garibaldi was received with the greatest enthusiasm by the vast crowd assembled outside the palace, and actually carried away in triumph.

The next day a different scene occurred. The occasion was the voting of the bills annexing Romilia and Tuscany. They were passed through all their stages at "a tearing gallop," and, on the final vote being demanded, all the members rose at once with a loud shout of exultation, which was still more loudly re-echoed by the galleries, and a loyal cheer of "Viva il Re!" again and again broke from the hearts of all present. Notwithstanding this hearty, spontaneous and universal acclamation, it was necessary again to put the question to the vote by ballot. The results were:—For the annexation of the Romilia—Members present, 215; votes, 214; for the bill, 214; against, 0. One deputy, Cheval, a Savoyard, abstained from voting. For the annexation of Tuscany—Deputies present 213; votes, 212; for the bill, 211; against, 1. Cheval again refused to vote. The result of the ballot was again received with prolonged applause.

In last Saturday's sitting, in the Chamber of Deputies, Signor Ridjeure made an interpellation referring to the late events in Sicily. Count Cavour, in his reply, considered a discussion on the subject both useless and dangerous. He further stated that the Neapolitan Government was pursuing its interior, and consequently its foreign affairs. "Our fellow-citizens are continuing the struggle." On the report of the committee in reference to a petition from some inhabitants of the northern provinces of Naples, requesting liberal conduct in voting upon the question of annexation, the Chamber, by a large majority, passed to the order of the day.

THE PAPAL STATES

The Chambers are adjourned for a fortnight, during the triumphal progresses of the King through Tuscany and the Romilia, at the same time Savoy and Nice are to be cut off from Sardinia.

The letter from Florence written by Count Cavour, has arrived at Florence, and has been received with enthusiasm by his new Tuscan subjects.

A letter from Turin states that the cession of Nice to France was an absolute necessity for Piedmont in order to obtain from Napoleon III. the guarantee of Lombardy and the Duchy of Parma. This guarantee appeared to be expressed in a secret article of the treaty of the 24th of March last which led to the cession of Savoy and Nice. France has, however, refused to guarantee to Piedmont the other annexed provinces, viz., Tuscany and the Legations.

The archives of Russia and England have been transferred from Florence to Turin.

According to letters from Rome, a great manifestation took place on the 19th in commemoration of the anniversary of the return of Pius IX. to Rome in 1850. On entering the Pope, accompanied by a crowd of persons, went to the church of St. Agnes, beyond the walls of Rome, where his Holiness celebrated mass, and gave the communion to 600 persons. On the return of his Holiness to the Vatican he was received with applause. In the evening the city was illuminated.

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.

The details on this subject are still fragmentary and conflicting. There seems to be little doubt, says the Post (Paris correspondent) about the fight at Palermo having been very severe. A letter I have seen from there on the 11th states the number of the killed and wounded. Frequently during the two days' combat the people had the best of it, but the Royal troops triumphed. The cries were "Annexation!" and "Live Italy!"

Some Marseilles telegrams state that a serious outbreak occurred at Messina, on the night of the 4th. It ran the length on the 5th the fire of guns and musketry was incessantly heard. Fuller particulars are given by a telegram from Malta, dated April 14:—"Advices received here the insurrection at Messina broke out on Sunday evening last. The movement commenced by attack by shot being fired in the Strada Ferdinanda; pieces of furniture were thrown from the windows upon the troops. An agent of the Messagerie Imperiale and several others were also assassinated. The steamer Mansuire were exposed to the fire of the musketry, and one of the crew was killed on board. The General made energetic motions to the Governor. The firing of musketry and several cannon shots were heard from the forts. The Governor on the 5th ordered the bombard the city should resistance continue to be offered. The principal inhabitants of the city then interfered, and requested that the town might be spared. The insurgents, however, should be removed. The troops made themselves masters of all the positions in the town and drove the insurgents before them into the country. On Monday evening the Mansuire left Messina with despatches for the Admiral Commo. Fears for the safety of Malta will be shortly received." Another, dated Marseilles, Tuesday, says:—"The direct steamer from Naples arrived this evening, and brings advices from Messina to the 11th inst. It was fired upon by the passengers of the Mansuire, which remained a great distance from the spot where the combat took place. Flying columns were pursuing the bands of insurgents who had taken refuge in the mountains."

PRUSSIA.

No important change has taken place in the condition of the King. His Majesty has, however, completely recovered from the effects of the colic he had suffered from. On next Friday the King received the sacrament from the hands of Dr. Snethlage, chief of the Consistorial Council, and on the following Sunday, the Sunday during Passion Week, and, after much conversation on the topic of the communion, the King expressed an earnest wish that the sacrament should be administered to him.

AUSTRIA.

During the night of Easter Sunday the Emperor of Austria left Vienna for Payerbach by a special train, which ran into a sand or rubbish car at the station of Pfaffstätten. The front of the car was smashed, and the carriage in which his Majesty and Prince Vasa were sitting was thrown off the line. The Emperor was not injured. Count After a delay of four hours at the station at Pfaffstätten, the travellers pursued their journey to Payerbach, where they had gone to shoot the first chamois of the season.

A Milan letter in the Opinion Nationale states that on Saturday last four unfortunate citizens of Milan were shot by General Culoz for having connived at the desertion of some Austrian soldiers.

SPAIN.

The son of General Ortega presented a petition to the Queen requesting her Majesty to spare the life of his father, but in vain—the General was shot on Wednesday evening. A search is being made for the remains of the body, which were shot by General Culoz from the execution of some Austrian soldiers.

TURKEY.

Religious disturbances broke out at Constantinople on Easter Sunday, and continued on Good Friday, when the Greek procession was insulted. Eggs were thrown from the windows. A Roman Catholic house, which was suspected, has been destroyed.

The Sultan, acting upon the advice of the Capitan Pacha, has recalled Omar Pacha from exile, and intends to appoint him to the command of the army of Anatolia, with a view to the events which may take place in the Slavonian provinces.

LATEST FROM MEXICO.—The Liberals defeated the 4th Regiment of Cavalry belonging to Miramon on the 4th ultimo, near Jalapa. General Vicilitia (Liberal) defeated 600 Reactionists at San Martin, near Puebla, taking seven pieces of artillery, arms, and ammunition. General Pubitia (Liberal) was besieging Logicalo at Huymanzo, fifty miles north of the city of Mexico. Puebla was threatened. It was reported that the city had been taken, but the statement lacks confirmation.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office early yesterday (Friday) morning:—

Nice.—Paris, Thursday.—The Paris papers contain the following message from Nice:—"Nearly all the communes of the mountains have voted unanimously for annexation to France. The number of voters will exceed 20,000. The vote of seventy communes is known. Up to the present time only 160 noes have been registered."

Hungary.—Vienna, Thursday.—Archduke Albert retires provisionally from his functions as Civil and Military Governor of Hungary, and is replaced by General Benedek, who is commissioned to regulate the municipal laws, to reorganise the comitats on the base of the old institutions, to submit his propositions for a central representation (diet) in Hungary, and to unite the five administrative sections into one administration (statthalterie) at Buda.

British Orphan Asylum.—At the anniversary festival of this institution, held on Wednesday evening at the London Tavern, the Chairman (the Marquis of Bristol) detailed the operations of the charity since its origin in 1827. Its object was the gratuitous education of orphans of both sexes whose parents had belonged to the middle classes of society. Children from all parts of the country had been received into the institution. The success that had attended the establishment was great; 500 children had been educated in it, and 400 had completed their education and left. There are 90 inmates at present. The directors have received 39 applications for admission in June, and they have only found themselves justified in admitting 10. The funded property of the institution is only producing £200. The list of subscriptions and collections made a total of nearly £1000.

City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest.—The twelfth anniversary festival of this charity was held on Tuesday evening at the London Tavern. The object of the institution, which was founded in 1848, was to afford relief to the poor afflicted with consumption and other diseases of the chest. The new hospital at Victoria Park was opened in 1855: 1360 in-patients have been under treatment since that period, and 56,000 out-patients have been relieved since the institution was first established. The cost of maintaining the charity amounts to about £4500 per annum, while at present the subscriptions amount only to 1400 a year. A loan of £1000 has been contracted, and subscriptions, therefore, are urgently required. The dinner was presided over by the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, who was supported by several eminent City men. The subscription at the close of the evening was liberal.

Births and Deaths.—Last week the births of 932 boys and 934 girls (in all 1866 children) were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-59 the average number was 1684.——The weather last week was unusually cold for April, and the mortality of London was high, though, as in the previous week, it was considerably lower than it was in the last three weeks of March. The deaths in the week that ended last Saturday were 1407, exceeding by 176 the number which the average rate of mortality in the second week of April would have produced. Five persons died from burns—one man from his clothes taking fire; two others from the burning of the houses in which they dwelt; two persons were burnt by means not recorded. Ten infants were suffocated in the bedclothes. Four infants were murdered. Three persons died from intemperance, besides two from delirium tremens.

Papers were read by the Rev. Thomas Hugo, F.S.A., on Doomsday Book, an inspection of which venerable record was most kindly permitted throughout the day by the Master of the Rolls; and by Mr. Basset Smith, on the Knights Templars. The company then quitted the hall to examine the church, and thence proceeded to visit the Record Office at the Rolls, Bridewell Hospital, and Stationers' Hall, where a paper on that building by Mr. J. G. Nichols, F.S.A., and a dinner at St. Paul's Coffee House, terminated the proceedings of a most agreeable day.

Cardinal Wiseman on the Papal Queston.—On Sunday a collection in aid of the Pope was made in all the Roman Catholic places of worship in the metropolis. By way of stimulating the liberality of the faithful, a portion of a lengthy "pastoral" from the pen of Cardinal Wiseman was read in the various chapels—the remainder of the document is to be read next Sunday. His Eminence enters fully into the troubles which have befallen the Supreme Pontiff, and, without mentioning any names, hurls anathemas at Louis Napoleon, Victor Emmanuel, and the English Government. He states that recent events have impoverished the Papal exchequer, and, although he hopes that a "favourable loan" will be immediately set on foot and may find success "even in England," still, in the meantime, he thinks the Catholics of England, like their coreligionists in Ireland, are bound, by filial considerations, to lay a substantial pecuniary tribute at the feet of the Holy Father.

The Proposed Exhibition of 1862.—The council of the Society of Arts have issued a statement of the conditions under which they propose to form a guarantee fund in order to carry into effect their project of a great International Exhibition in 1862. No subscriber will incur any liability until at least £250,000 has been guaranteed; no calls will be made if the receipts of the Exhibition cover the expenses; and should there be a surplus, as was the case in 1851, the amount will be at the disposal of the guarantors "for the promotion of arts, manufactures, and commerce." £170,000 has been already promised for this object.——A letter has been addressed to the secretary of the Society of Arts by command of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, President of the Society, expressing the readiness of his Royal Highness to place his name on the list of guarantors for the sum of £10,000 as soon as the sum of £240,000 has been subscribed. The council do not propose to limit the fund to the £250,000 named, but, having secured that sum, they will endeavour to increase it as much as possible. A circular letter has been addressed to the members of the society, drawing their attention to the importance of filling up the guarantee list as soon as possible, and those members and their friends who are desirous of giving their assistance to this undertaking are requested to send in their names to the Secretary of the Society of Arts as early as possible, with the sums they are willing to guarantee. The amounts guaranteed by individuals vary from £10,000 to £100.

THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL AND THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

TALK of exploring the sources of the Nile! Would the wildest speculator in archæological research, when he sat down to write the history of the fine arts in Great Britian, dream of tracing the origin of its Royal Academy to a refuge for foundlings! Yet the facts of the case warrant this conclusion; and the association was, after all, not so unnatural. In those days art itself was an outcast, without home or heritage, without encouragement of any kind, and glad of any opportunity of making its pretensions known, even without pecuniary reward.

Edwards, in his "Anecdotes of Painters," speaking of the unsuccessful attempts made to form an Academy, says—"Whether all those endeavours of the artists had not succeeded, they were far from being so discouraged as not to continue their meetings as well as their studies: and the next effort they made towards acquiring the attention of the public was connected with the Foundling Hospital. This institution, so humane in its primitive intention, whatever may be thought of its effects, was incorporated by charter, dated 1739. For years after that period the present building was erected; but, as the income of the charity could with no propriety be expended on decorations, many of the principal artists of that day be expended on decorations, many of the principal artists of that day set apart their talents for the purpose of ornamenting several voluntarily exerted their talents for the purpose of ornamenting several of the apartments of the Hospital, which otherwise must have remained without decoration. The pictures they produced and generously given were permitted to be seen by any visitor upon proper application. By this expedient so new that it made a considerable impression, and the favourable reception these works met with on the public, and the favourable reception these works experienced impressed the artists with an idea of forming a public exhibition."

A more recent writer has said "that it is within the walls of the Foundling Hospital rooms may contemplate the state of British art previously to the epoch when George III. first countenanced the historical branch of Art."

William Hogarth was foremost in this movement. In 1740 he presented to this establishment his picture of Moses brought before Pharaoh's daughter," which and about the same period Handel came forward to enrich it with his oratorios.

In 1745, the west wing of the Hospital being finished, other artists followed the example of Hogarth by giving, or promising to give, to the establishment works of art; and on the 1st of February, 1746, a grand court held at the Hospital elected all such artists to be governors, with authority to meet at the Foundling annually, or three or more of them, "to consider what further ornaments may be added to the building without expense to this charity." At this meeting, which commenced with the memorable suggestion "that any three or more of them be a committee," increased so rapidly in importance and interest, that what was intended as a mere matter of form developed in an occasion for conviviality, and that on the 5th of November of each succeeding year the artists and patrons of art dined at the Hospital in increasing numbers. In the year 1757 the party was no less than 154 in number.

In 1759 the meeting presided at the elevated "March to Finchley" to the Hospital, or rather the hundred and sixty-seven unsold chances in the lottery for that picture, one of which was drawn by the lucky artist. Soon afterwards was added the picture of "Moses before Pharoah's Daughter," which was painted expressly for the Foundling, and may appear to have resulted in a conjoint agreement between Hayman, Highmore, Wills, and himself that they should each fill up one of the compartments of the room over the Governors' Committee, of the size and of suitable subjects, taken from Scripture. Hayman's picture was "The Finding of the Infant Moses in the Bulrushes;" Highmore's, "Hagar and Ishmael;" and Wills's, "Little Children Brought to Christ." We gave an Engraving of this composition, so interesting in its associations, and which is admirably decorated with works of art in painting and sculpture. In addition to these already mentioned, we find the following pictures in the list:—Wills's, for the Foundling and St. George's Hospitals, by Hilton; Chelsea and Bethlehem Hospitals, by Hayfley; St. Thomas's Hospital, which Bethlehem Hospitals, by Hayfley; St. Thomas's Hospital, which was destroyed in the Blue-coat School, by Wale; Sutton's Hospital (the Charterhouse), by Gainsborough. Over the chimneypiece a bas-relief by Roubiliac.

As the inmates of the Hospital increased the governors were obliged to erect a branch establishment in the country, and to place them, one of which is at Ackworth, in Yorkshire, where they were employed in the manufacture of clothing, &c. Connected with this establishment is a curious provision on the part of the fraternity of artists, which will be sufficiently explained by the following copy of a document relating to it:—

York's Head Tavern, December 7, 1760.

We whose names are hereunto subscribed do hereby agree that on the 8th November at the Artists' Feast, at the Foundling Hospital, Lamb's Conduit Fields, it is matt of clothes manufactured by the children of the Hospital, at Ackworth, in Yorkshire, to be all of one colour, and that they be made in Yorkshire.

Nath. Honey, G. M. Moser, J. Reynolds, B. Barrow, T. Wale, B. Wilson, Geo. Michael Moser, Wm. Hogarth, Bend. C. Hollis, R. Hayward, Josh. Willen, John Lockman, Richd. Yeo, T. Wilson, Tho. Thomson.

In the meantime the donations in painting, &c.—the result of these meetings—had increased; and, "being exhibited to the public, drew a daily crowd of spectators in their splendid equipages; and a visit to the Foundling became the most fashionable amusement for a time in the reign of George II. The eclat thus excited in favour of the arts suggested the annual exhibition of their works, which institution was the precursor of the Royal Academy."

On the 12th of November, 1759, the artists held a general meeting at the above-named tavern, the Turk's Head, situated in Gerrard-street, Soho; when it was resolved that, "once in every year, on a day in the month of March in April, at a room to be taken and prepared by a committee for carrying the design into execution, to be chosen annually, every painter, sculptor, engraver, chaser, gem-cutter, and medalist may exhibit their several performances." And then, as to the objects of the promoters of this exhibition, and the purpose to which the proceeds are to be applied, the resolution states "That the intention of this meeting is to endeavour to procure a sum of money for the benefit of those artists who may be in distressed circumstances, or other lawful hindrances prevent them from being any longer candidates for fame. And it is resolved that the profit that may be taken daily of each person who may come to visit the said performances."

Application was then made to the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce in the Adelphi for the use of their great room for the purpose of the proposed exhibition, a reply to which the Society of Arts assented to the proposition generally, but objected to "that part of it which relates to the taking of a shilling at the door." This objection on the score of charging an admission fee was met by submitting the public to a shilling charge at the door, and a catalogue sold. This first public exhibition of works of British artists took place at the society's rooms in the Adelphi, opening on the 21st of April, 1760 (exactly a century ago), and finally closing on the 8th of May. Of the number of visitors during this fortnight no record is preserved, but the number of catalogues sold was 6382, the proceeds being £164 11s. Of this sum £68 12s. 6d. was absorbed in expenses, £32 3s. 6d. was expended in charity, leaving a £60 Three per Cent Consols, and a balance of £23 16s. was carried over.

It appears that during the progress of this exhibition the views of the managers as to the application of the surplus receipts underwent a considerable change. Instead of being applied to the relief of aged and distressed artists, it was resolved, at a meeting held on the 10th of May, 1760, "That after the expenses of the exhibition are defrayed the balance should be applied to the advancement of the Academy." And on the 23rd of May a resolution was passed "That the money be applied to the advancement of the arts in such way as might hereafter be determined."

Still the refusal of the Society of Arts to allow money to be taken at the doors was an obstruction in the way of those views. It was in vain that the artists attempted to render the exhibition a profitable thing by such person obligatory as the price of admission, justifying such resolution upon the ground of "great inconvenience having resulted from inferior people crowding the exhibition-room last year" it was in vain that they amplified upon this grievance in a letter to the Society of Arts, alleging that "the exhibition of last year was crowded and incommoded by the intrusion of persons whose stations and situations disqualified them from judging of statuary and painting, and who are made idle and tumultuous by the opportunity of attending a show;" the Society of Arts were firm in their liberal resolve, and insisted "that the exhibition should be free and open to the public at proper hours, and under proper regulations."

It was under these circumstances that the larger and more influential members of the exhibiting artists, under the denomination of the Society of Artists of Great Britain, seceded from the remainder of their brethren, and in the following year opened an exhibition at an auctioneer's room in Spring-gardens; the admission to which was by the compulsory purchase of a shilling catalogue. The non-seceders continued to exhibit, with impaired and yearly diminishing success, till 1768, when a new division started amongst the "Society of Artists of Great Britain," the result of which was the formation of the Royal Academy out of one portion of that body, established by the authority and favour of the King, and which, monopolising the best talent, has ever since held distinguished rank among artists. The subsequent progress of the new institution, marked by many curious incidents, and its influence upon art and artists, would afford ample material for another article, which, perhaps, we may one day undertake.

A PIEDMONTESE DANDY IN 1860.

WE are apt to associate with our ideas of the inhabitants of different countries a certain notion of their costumes and general appearance by which we fancy we could easily distinguish, for instance, a Neapolitan. The dresser of a Swiss, a Pole, a Russian, a Spaniard, an Italian, a North American Indian, or a Chinese, are present to the mind's eye by a sort of intuitive knowledge of their aspect. In the good old times, when entire peoples were represented in books of geography by a simple little engraving, so that an ordinary page figured forth the inhabitants of at least one quarter of the globe, the notion given was tolerably correct, but nowadays the intercommunication between nations has had a tendency to render costume as well as prices almost uniform in each people preserving, however, in its peculiar imitation of the latest Parisian model something of its own idiosyncrasy. The Englishman has his trousered legs and his upright collar; the Spaniard his ample cloak thrown in tragic folds across his shoulder; the Chinaman (for we have seen a Celestial draped to a nicety in his pigtail); in fact, each nation something by which it may be recognised. These peculiarities are, then, the characteristics of the different classes of dress. The picturesque dandy of our Illustration, drawn from nature by the clever artist Stop, is another example of the way in which people preserve the exterior of their nationality. The fez, who gravely fancies (in consequence of the assurance by him that effect from his tarbouch) that he would pass for a Turk as a Parisian; but yet the true form of the wide-brimmed hat would seem to result from a pressure which left little trace of yore on the pliant felt of which that article used to be manufactured; and then the very tight trousers are Italian all over, Venetian particularly. Our Turin exercises of 1859 seems also, to our taste, to have exaggerated a little the tails of his surtout, which he has thought proper to ornament with a flower at the button-hole. It must not be supposed that our Engraving has the slightest space of caricature about it; and we can assure our readers that the subject of it, notwithstanding his gold chain and silk-tasselled cane, is one of the sincerest patriots in the dominions of Victor Emmanuel.

THE LATE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

THE medals prepared for the performers who assisted at the Commemoration Festival lately held at the Crystal Palace have just been distributed. The medal has been executed in bronze by Mr. W. J. Taylor, of Little Queen-street, and is highly creditable to the artist. It represents on the obverse the bust of Handel, the portrait taken from the famous statue of Roubilliac in the possession of the Sacred Harmonic Society; and on the reverse, within a wreath of laurels and bays, is the inscription, "Handel Commemoration Festival. Crystal Palace, 1859." The name of each performer is lettered upon the edge of his medal. It may not be amiss to state, for the benefit of those not acquainted with the details of medal-making, that a bronze medal of this size (two inches in diameter) costs 5s. when struck. When blown in a powerful press (the one used for this occasion being estimated to strike with a force of 100 tons), and the medal has to be annealed in a furnace between each blow. The weight of copper required approaches half a ton.

ALTON TOWERS.

THE large property which was left by Bertram, late Earl of Shrewsbury, to the infant son of the Duke of Norfolk, but which the highest legal authority in the land has decided that he had no power to disentail or bequeath, as being inseparable from the title, comprises a rent-roll of about £40,000 a year. It consists of estates at Heythrop and Banbury, in Oxfordshire; at Burghfield, in Berkshire; at Grafton, in Worcestershire; at Albrighton, Cheswardine, and Rockwardine, in Salop; also extensive lands near Birkenhead, Cheshire, and at Sheffield, but especially domain and residence of Alton Towers, near Cheadle, Staffordshire. Until a comparatively recent date the chief residence of the Talbot family was at Heythrop, Oxfordshire, where, though the family mansion is no longer standing, the name still survives in connexion with the Heythrop Hunt. At Heythrop the Duke of Shrewsbury, some century and a half ago, built a noble mansion, at the time that his friend and neighbour, Vanbrugh, was rearing the stately pile of Woodstock Blenheim; but it was burnt down early in the present century. Since that time the family, even shortly before the Duke of Shrewsbury have preferred to be magnates in Staffordshire "rather than in Oxfordshire. The estates at Alton have been the property of the family for upwards of 400 years; but the princely residence of which we have give an Engraving was originally the work of Charles, fifteenth Earl of Shrewsbury, towards the close of the eighteenth century. Alton Towers, or, as it was formerly styled, Alton Abbots, stands on an elevated position, upon which was, some eighty or a hundred years ago, a barren waste of moorland, on the site of an old farm-house, the ruins of which are a few mounds of very irregular shape. The sides of this ravine were laid out by the above-mentioned nobleman with great skill and taste in the Italian fashion, planted, without any expense, with noble forest trees and shrubs; and so they became the groundwork of those magnificent gardens for which every visitor to Staffordshire used to behold with admiration prior to their partial dismantlement at the time of the sale in 1857. Thus, in front of the house, a recent statue carved in stone beneath a bust of the Earl which stands, or at least did stand, in the midst of that earthly Eden, "He made the wilderness to blossom."

The ancient castle,† which stood on the heights at Alton, was destroyed during the wars of the Commonwealth, and the ruins of its ruins are still to be seen on almost perpendicular rock, at the foot of which runs a small stream, the Churnet—the only considerable river in the valley throughout the whole domain, the chief drawback of which is the want of water as an assistance to the view.

The mansion, which was erected in the early part century, was considerably enlarged in size and increased in beauty by the sixteenth Earl, who died in the year 1826, and who added the great arch on the fatric. The park, which is several miles in extent, is entered through a lodge situated at the foot of a steep hill, which leads to a village of Alton, on the ridge which crosses the Churnet. On ascending the hill towards the mansion by a serpentine road, which passes for upwards of a mile through a noble park, and by a finely stained glass, lighting the great dining-hall (as yet unfinished), at the top of which is another lodge containing a beautiful statue of the Virgin Mary. The chapel has no windows to the front at all: it stands at some distance from the great road from the gates to the principal window is at right angles to the View given at page 376. The grand front is spacious and lofty, and is embattled. Above, from the noble and spacious hall there is a stone staircase leading to the state and private apartments, with a groined roof supported by clustered pillars. The chapel, which was originally intended for a picture-gallery. It leads into the conservatory, which is a truly magnificent one. "A complete view of the whole estate is obtained." At here, says Neal, "is sweetly combined with nature, and the hand of art is plainly visible in producing the most picturesque effects." The grand front is a large lake; and passing by the west of the sheet of water, where the road is made of stone for some distance, a fine view is obtained of the Alton Towers, slightly on the left, a castellated building, which screens from view the stables and kitchens of the Hospice of the Holy Cross. In the walks on the sides are the gardens to which we have already alluded, and in which a cast iron bridge forms a quaint but pleasing feature. From the summit of the grounds, and from the beauty of the surrounding country, the views are varied and most picturesque.

The chapel and the principal exterior of Alton Towers owe much to the cultivated taste of the late Mr. Pugin, and his genius for adapting Gothic architecture to the requirements of the social and domestic arrangements of the nineteenth century. Indeed, during the occupation of John, Earl of Shrewsbury (the predecessor of the present), the entire edifice was thoroughly refurnished in the most costly and splendid Gothic style; but all the movable portions of this furniture are gone, having been disposed of by auction, together with pictures, and other works of art, by public auction in the summer of 1857. The present Earl, however, is making considerable progress of a princely character in and precincts; but on the house and gardens alike it will be necessary for him to spend many thousands of pounds before he can bring the place into the state of splendid residence of the representative of the great Earl of Shrewsbury, at whose name French infants trembled in their cradles, and whose chivalrous deeds have been made immortal not only in the perishable pages of Debrett, but in the immortal lines of Shakspeare.

In the thirty-first volume of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS (from June to December, 1857) some Illustrations in connexion with Alton Towers were given, among which were a view of the gardens and another of the conservatory.

The following is a list of the new Earl of Shrewsbury we extract from the "County Families" :—

SHREWSBURY AND TALBOT (eighteenth Earl of). Henry John Chetwynd Talbot, C.B., D.C.L., born 1803, eldest son of the second Earl Talbot, by

† It is not a little singular that no mention of Alton Towers is to be found in the "Beauties of England and Wales," vol. xiii., part 2 (Staffordshire), published in the year 1813.

‡ An excellent view of these gardens, before the dispersion of their beautiful and costly contents, was published about two years since by chromolithography by Mr. T. J. Rawlins, to whom we are indebted for the general view of Alton Towers which we have given.

§ It is impossible to ascertain the date of the foundation of Alton, or Alveton, Castle. In the reign of Edward II. the castle was the property of Anthony de Verdon; and Dr. Plott says that it was built by one of the family—probably Sir Theobald de Verdon, one of Edward I.'s progenitors; and less of the walls, however, shews it to have been a very great one. The stately-arched gate of the castle were made by the present Earl to serve as the foundation of a very magnificent monastery erected on the death of the by the late Mr. Pugin, but which was left unfinished, and is standing, late Earl, who lies buried within it. One side of the church is standing, and in the centre of the unoccupied quadrangle is a very beautiful and the gilded rood, which, it is to be hoped, the new Earl will preserve as a work of art.

‖ On the top of the high-pitched roof of the hall, where a louvre generally is placed, there is a very elegant spire, with cast-iron tracery, of a very peculiar character, the whole of which is richly gilded, and from its remarkable shape. It serves for the purpose of a conspicuous in every view of the house, as forming a pretty feature in the character of the exterior, and is admired by every tourist as a chef-d'œuvre in its way.

Frances Thomasine, daughter of C. Lambert, Esq.; born in 1803; succeeded in 1849 as third Earl Talbot, and established his claim to the earldom of Shrewsbury in 1858; married, in 1828, Sarah, daughter of the second Marquis of Waterford. Is a Rear-Admiral retired, and a Naval A.D.C. to the Queen; is Earl of Wexford and Waterford in Ireland (created in 1446); Hereditary Lord High Steward of Ireland, and Premier Earl in the English and Irish Peerage; a Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Stafford; was M.P. for Dublin in 1830-1, for Hertford in 1832-3, for South Staffordshire in 1837-49. Patronage, thirteen livings Ingestre Hall, near Stafford; Alton Towers, near Cheadle, Staffordshire; United Service and Carlton Clubs, S.W.; 32, St. James's place, S.W. Heir, his son, Viscount Ingestre, born in 1830; married, in 1855, Theresa, daughter of the late R. H. Cockerell, Esq.; educated at Eton, and Merton College, Oxford; is a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Stafford, and a Captain in the Staffordshire Yeomanry; late Lieutenant in the 1st Life Guards; was M.P. for Stafford in 1857-9; and elected M.P. for North Staffordshire in 1859.

There were great rejoicings in Staffordshire last week on the occasion of Earl Talbot's inheritance of the title and estates of Shrewsbury. The fêtes commenced on Tuesday and terminated on Friday. The Earl entertained a large circle of private friends at Ingestre, where the fine old family mansion was full to overflowing with a brilliant circle of guests, who, indeed, were so numerous that extra accommodation had to be sought in the neighbouring county institutions. Lord Hatherton, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, at Teddesley, and the Earl of Lichfield, at Shugborough, and others of the neighbouring nobility and gentry, also entertained select parties of friends.

The ball at Stafford on Tuesday was opened by Lady Gertrude Talbot and the Marquis of Abercorn, who, with the following noblemen and ladies, made up the first eight couples of the first quadrille: Lord Shrewsbury and the Marchioness of Abercorn, Lord Chelmsford and Viscountess Ingestre, Lord Lichfield and the Marchioness of Lothian, Lady Lichfield and the Marquis of Waterford, the Marchioness of Waterford and the Earl of Eglinton, the Earl of Tyrone and Lady Georgiana Hamilton, and Viscount Ingestre and the Countess of Eglinton. The noble host and hostess, and Lord Ingestre, were unceasing in their endeavours throughout the evening to promote the comfort of their numerous guests. The appearance of the supper-tables when the room was thrown open was very inviting. A monster boar's head occupied the post of honour; and an almost leviathan salmon, reposing in a sea of Mayonnaise sauce, seemed to be attacked on all sides by red coated crayfish, reminding one of Gulliver in the Island of Lilliput, whilst the exotic delicacies of "patés de foies gras de Strasbourg" were not forgotten. The picturesque appearance of the tables, so well laden and tastefully arranged with creature comforts, was heightened by a massive silver candelabrum and bouquets of choice exotics. After supper the dancing was continued till four o'clock on Wednesday morning, when a "Sir Roger de Coverley" closed the programme.

The festivities were resumed on Wednesday evening with another ball at the Shirehall, to which Lord Shrewsbury's tenantry and tradesmen were invited to meet his Lordship and his guests. The company was scarcely so numerous as on Tuesday night, but the dancing was of a more spirited character. The ball was opened at about ten o'clock by Lady Gertrude Talbot and one of the principal tenants.

On Thursday most of the Earl of Shrewsbury's visitors engaged in the sports of the hunting-field. The Earl of Shrewsbury, Lord Ingestre, and most of the visitors at Ingestre returned to the hall at about two o'clock, after the run across the chase, and then commenced the other principal features in the day's rejoicings. The labourers on the estate and the school-children from seven adjoining parishes, amounting together to between 1600 and 1800, were supplied in the farm-buildings adjoining the hall, and in temporary erections put up there for the purpose, with a dinner of meat, bread, plum-pudding, and ale.

The fêtes culminated on Friday in a vast public cavalcade to celebrate the Earl of Shrewsbury's taking formal possession of Alton Towers. His Lordship determined to make a public entry into Alton, upon a requisition from a large number of his tenantry and the yeomanry, and the 13th of April, being an anniversary of the natal day of Viscount Ingestre, his Lordship attaining his thirtieth year on Friday, was felicitously chosen for complying with the requisition. We defer giving the particulars of this crowning event of the week's rejoicings until next week, when we shall illustrate the Luncheon in the Talbot Gallery.

MONACO.

This small principality of North Italy, which is under the protection of Sardinia, is bounded by the county of Nice, the duchy of Genoa, and the sea. It has an excellent climate, and is very fertile, its chief productions being oranges, lemons, and other fruits. Monaco, the capital of the principality, is situated on a rocky promontory on the Mediterranean. Its fortifications were erected by Louis XIV. The palace, a fine terrace overlooking the sea, and two hospitals, are its principal objects of interest.

The following lively description of this petty principality and its capital is from a correspondent at Monaco:—"On the crown of a rock which rises majestically from the Mediterranean between Nice and Genoa stands Monaco, the capital, and, since 1848, the only town of the principality of the same name. From the sea, and at a distance, this rock, with the tongue of land that connects it with the Continent, has the appearance of a dismasted line-of-battle ship chained by a gigantic cable to the surrounding mountains. On drawing nearer, the eye is charmed by the rugged grandeur of the rock, which, split into a thousand crevices by an eternal warfare with the ocean, bristles with a warrior's crown of huge cacti and Barbary fig-trees. At every point accessible to a human foot there stands a wall of masonry, raised in the days when might was right, and before that awful vindicator of the equality of man—gunpowder—had proved that works of this character were only prison-houses for their garrisons. An article in the Presse states that a few fortified works would 'render Monaco almost impregnable.' This is not strictly correct. The semicircle of mountains which incloses the principality belongs to Sardinia. From these heights an assailing army, composed of two average cricket-bowlers from 'Lord's,' armed with turnips and such like missiles, flanked by a light company of six Eton boys, provided with peashooters, would compel the place to capitulate in twenty-four hours. The town, perched as I have described on this rock, is surrounded by ramparts, along which runs a pleasant public walk, constructed by Prince Honoré. Four narrow streets, badly paved and not lighted up, compose the capital. The palace, an extensive building of a singular construction, faces the entrance to these streets. The space between the latter and the palace forms a square, planted with trees, from which a magnificent view, and, in summer, a delightful sea breeze, are obtained. In this square are also numerous pyramids of heavy shot and shell, in a rusty condition, with cannon, some of which were left by the French on their retreat from the principality in the great disasters of the Empire. The other broadside of the supposed line-of-battle ship faces the mountains of which I have spoken. A narrow strip of land separates the rock from the latter; and it is this pretty vale which constitutes, with the town, the principality of Monaco. The vale glows with orange and lemon trees, and is a perfect garden in beauty. The sea runs inland along the side of the rock, and thus forms a minute port."

We gave last week a View of the Town of Aix-les-Bains, in mistake for one of Monaco, and we now append a few particulars of the former place which we request our readers to take in connection with the top Engraving on page 353 of last week's Number.

AIX-LES-BAINS, IN SAVOY.

About eight miles from Chambéry is the charming little town of Aix-les-Bains (Aquæ Gratianæ of the Romans), so called from its celebrated waters, which have for ages attracted the suffering to this neighbourhood, rendered still more delightful by the immediate vicinity of the Lake of Bourget. It possesses a great many antiquities, and is historically remarkable as having been the place where the cession of Savoy and Maurienne was made to Berold by Rodolphe, in the year 1000. For the accommodation of visitors there are in and near the town a great many tasteful habitations. From one of them, the Villa of Tresserve, the View given in our present Number was taken. The result of the election at Aix-les-Bains on the 28th of March was favourable to the French régime. Out of 165 voters, 118 declared for M. Martinel, the annexionist candidate. This will make the fifth place bearing the name of Aix in the French empire, the other four being Aix in Provence; the island of Aix in the Ocean, near the mouth of the River Charente; Aix d'Augillon, in the department of the Cher; and Aix-en-Othe, in the department of the Aube.

FRONTIER OF SWITZERLAND AND SAVOY ON THE FORCLAZ.

About a mile and a half from Martigny, in the direction of Chamouni, the tourist may remember to have crossed a rapid and brawling stream, the Dranse, probably unconscious that he was passing the natural boundary of Switzerland and Savoy; at least, unsuspecting that the relations of these two countries were to become subjects of so much political agitation. On arriving at the summit of the Forclaz, which rises immediately from this stream in a rapid ascent, the traveller's passport is demanded by the Sardinian authorities. We trust that our Illustration may bring to the recollection of many that scene of mountain magnificence. Now, after enjoying on the Swiss side of the mountain those lovely glimpses into the distant valley of the Rhone from beneath a foreground of luxuriant walnut-trees overhanging the picturesque water-mills and châlets which line the precipitous path, he found the character of the scenery changed on arriving on the small hut on the Savoy side. Above were those glittering glaciers of the Trient, supported by grey weather-beaten crags, which seemed to have realised the idea of the poet that "The earth with age was wan." A different vegetation presented itself in those dark and solemn groves of larch which have here attained such height and strength in their mountain growth, while from below arose the voice of the torrent here forcing its way through the débris and boulders with which the valley is strewn. Every tourist from Martigny to Chamouni will remember this spot, and the small wooden "octroi" built against the rock. When the red cross—that simple device of the Sardinian Government, rudely painted over its door—shall hereafter have been superseded by Imperial eagles or Gallic cocks—when the smiling Savoyard douanier (who sold such incomparable "kirschwasser" shall be replaced by the pompous gendarme—for many years will this and the other frontiers of these two countries be passed with feelings of jealousy and regret. Still, to the lover of Nature, will the unsullied whiteness of those everlasting snows, the bold front of those mighty mountains, yielding to no influence but that of the elements, and the solemn voice of the torrent in its appointed course, raise his thoughts above all the petty shifts and changes of human policy and power.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

Radiant Heat.—M. Knoblauch's researches on the interference of the rays of heat are epitomised in the new number of the Bibliothèque Universelle de Genève. The phenomena of interference so intimately connected with the undulatory theory of light are manifested also by heat, and thus establishes a strict analogy between calorific and luminous radiations.

Iodine in the Atmosphere.—M. Chatin affirms the existence of iodine in rain-water. No statement in chemistry has been more disputed than this. M. Chatin's process is given in the Repertoire de Chimie, but the editor, M. Barreswil, considers that M. Chatin has not supported his assertion by any new argument.

Astronomy—The Repulsive Force—At a recent sitting of the French Academy of Sciences, M. Faye submitted a memoir on the hypothesis of the repulsive force in connection with the theory of satellites. He says, en resumé, "We find in the motions of the satellites of the planets weak but serious indications of the presence of a repulsive force, due to the incandescence of the sun, and are authorised to conclude that, far from troubling the celestial harmony which now exists between facts and the theory of the attractive force, the repulsive force comes, on the contrary, to fill in the gaps, by connecting in a simple and natural manner the figure and acceleration of comets with the most delicate circumstances of the motions of our satellites."

Vesuvius.—M. Ch. Ste-Claire Deville has communicated to the French Academy of Sciences a letter from M. Palmieri, who states that Vesuvius is now in a state of great activity. He adds, "Since May 1, 1858, Vesuvius has not ceased from throwing up lava near the base of the great cone. The Fosso Grande has disappeared; the roadway no more exists. The crevices in the crater (fumerolles) have yielded ammoniacal salts and salts of copper and lead in abundance, and a little iron, titanium, and selenium. Those fumerolles of 1855, which have not been covered by the lava of 1858, still retain a very elevated temperature."

"The Purple of the Ancients."—M. Lacaze-Duthier's memoir on this dye occupies wholly the zoological part of the new number of the Annales des Sciences Naturelles. The subject is treated in an exhaustive manner, and is illustrated by a coloured plate showing the secretive organs of the murex.

Testing the Oils of Commerce.—In the Repertoire de Chimie M. Cailletet has supplied modes of testing all kinds of oils by means of sulphuric acid, water, and nitric acid. M. Barreswil is not so sanguine as the author of the paper as to the success of his processes, which, however, merit the attention of persons interested in the subject.

Alcoholic Fermentation.—M. Pasteur's remarkable memoir on this subject appears in the new number of the Annales de Chimie. The researches of the great chemists Lavoisier, Gay Lussac, Thénard, Liebig, Pelouze, and others, are fully discussed, and the author's own experiments described; the changes which the sugar and yeast undergo are shown, as also the formation of alcohol, and of carbonic, succinic, and lactic acids, glycerine, &c. Engravings of the apparatus and tables of results are given.

BONUS YEAR.
NORTHERN ASSURANCE COMPANY.—Established 1836.
Capital, £1,259,760. Accumulated Premium Fund, upwards of £350,000.
Office in London.—1, Moorgate-street.
The next investigation, for the purpose of declaring a Bonus to the Policy-holders, will take place on the 31st of January, 1861, and all Policies in the participating class, effected prior to that date, will share in the profits then to be divided.
The whole of the profits of this branch are divisible, in terms of the Act of Incorporation, amongst the insured.
The last Bonus declared by the company was at the rate of £1 7s. 6d. per cent per annum on the amount insured a return of which, when its very moderate scale of premiums is considered, has rarely been exceeded by any other office.
As an illustration of the proportion which the additions already made to Policies bear to the sums paid by the assured in the shape of Premiums, it will be sufficient to state that a Policy for £1000 taken out in 1836, on a life then aged 25, and upon which £593 have been received by the Office, has been increased by successive Bonus additions to the sum of £1351 1s. 10d., the increase being equal to Seventy per Cent on the Premiums paid by the assured.
All policies are guaranteed by a subscribed capital of upwards of One Million Sterling, an accumulated and invested premium fund of over £350,000, and the unlimited responsibility of upwards of Seven Hundred Shareholders. A. P. Fletcher, Secretary.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1860.

We record with reluctance, but have no alternative, that the brutalities perpetrated near Farnborough on Tuesday morning have attracted more attention than any other topic that has occurred since we last wrote. Between the indignant denunciations of those who condemned the whole proceedings as disgraceful to a civilised and Christian country, the sophisms of those who found excuses for the combat on the ground that it had something of an international character, and was not to be regarded as an ordinary piece of ruffianism, and its eager advocacy by the disreputable class that finds gain in such practices, everybody has been talking a great deal about the battle between the English champion and the American challenger—both, by the way, sons of Irish parents. The details of the fight have been given at great length by journals that usually exclude such narratives. Round the ring, and mingling with the ill-looking scoundrels habitually in attendance on such occasions, were seated members of the high aristocracy and of Parliament, and, as the Times says, "authors, artists, painters, poets, and even clergymen were there." Officers from Aldershott and elsewhere were also numerous. We have but to note the circumstances, and hope never to have to parallel them. The battle itself was terribly savage and unfair, the American gladiator being much younger, much taller, and much heavier than his English antagonist, who, nevertheless, would probably have been the victor had the combat been protracted a little longer, Sayers having beaten Heenan nearly blind. But, after two hours and twenty minutes of desperate fighting, the police and the mob forced their way into the ring, and the struggle was declared to be over. Victory is adjudged to neither. Were we writing of a scene in a Roman circus in the days of heathendom, we might say something of the splendid and savage power of Eumolpus and the singular skill and indomitable endurance of Nepeus; but, as we are writing of a land that sends out Bibles and missionaries to Mohammedans and Pagans, we simply register our protest against any false colouring being given to a scene got up by nearly the worst people in America and England, and which is a blot upon the social history of the year 1860.

Parliament has reassembled, and a new battle-ground has been chosen for the Reform Bill. Mr. Massey, a Liberal member, has given notice of his intention, after the second reading, to move that the bill be referred to a Select Committee. This would be, of course, equivalent to "shelving" the measure for the Session. The debate itself is to be resumed on Monday. Debates on subjects of less interest have occurred, and, among other matters, a bill for a questionable "improvement" of the legal profession has advanced a stage. Its educational provisions are excellent, but it proposes to increase advantages and power to a class thought to have already quite enough of both. A provision for admitting persons to practise who have not been articled secure, on the other hand, very unfair to those who are compelled to pay a tremendous stamp duty and a heavy premium, in addition to going through a long course of probation, and who are supposed to be taken from the persons in which we look for a sense of high honour as well as professional shrewdness.

One of the parties charged with disturbances in St. George's-in-the-East has at length been brought to justice, though his punishment will be more than a nominal one. The fine of £10, however, marks him as a culprit, without elevating him to the desired position of a martyr. He made a claptrap appeal to a "Protestant public," but there was no such determination in the opposition to the numeriaries and millinery of the Puseyites have no sympathy for a brawler in church, and he is laughed at. His protestations of innocence, in the face of evidence that satisfied the calm, clear-headed Judge who heard the case, will have weight only with the illogical persons who "feel more comfortable" when a condemned person confesses. But the ricotings continue, and a good deal of the Puseyite foolery is also continued, and both should be summarily stopped. If the law be insufficient to meet the difficulty it should be amended, for, though legislation for particular cases is usually inexpedient, what is now occurring at St. George's might occur in any parish in England where there is a silly priest and a brutal mob.

The death of Count Szechenyi is an event of European interest. That nobleman did more for Hungary, more to preserve her nationality, than any man of the present day has done for his country. And he did that by the very legitimate means of living by himself, by example, and, we should add, by the most generous sacrifice of his personal fortune. That he was intensely hated, and, whenever opportunity occurred, insulted and injured, by the Austrian authorities, it hardly requires to say. His mind became affected, and finally this accomplished gentleman and ardent patriot died by his own hand. Hungary is in mourning for him, and the paltry efforts of the Government to repress so honourable a demonstration will only increase the sympathy with which the name of Szechenyi is associated by his countrymen.

Our impression this week may possibly include a telegraph announcing that the Spanish Government has not chosen to extend mercy to General Ortega, the leader of the Carlist attempt. Already the Austrian party has been engaged in active efforts for this short-ve effort, and unless very strong intercession be employed by the Tuileries the fate of Ortega is sealed. The greater offender will, in all probability, be allowed to escape, as Queen Isabella seems to be naturally disinclined to put any one to death, even though he had endeavoured to discrown her. The Duke of Tetuan was reported as still in his dukedom, to the wonder of most persons who supposed that his interests in Spain required prompt attention, the peace being unpopular. Pro sua reparde.

Official returns testify to the deleterious influence of the extraordinary weather which is afflicting us at a time when we usually look for "perfect skies." The mortality of the last week in London has been in excess of what was to be expected. Fierce storms of hail and sleet towards the end of April are unwelcome phenomena, and, despite Mr. Kingsley, the east wind is not much blessed by those who are obliged to face it. But we must find what comfort we can in the belief, first, that the backward season is good for the fruit, and, secondly, that the account will be balanced by a bounteous summer. What, however, was done for the calendar in the long winter must really be done for the meteorological year. It must be rectified, and we hope that, charming as are Isaac Watts's lyrics, no innocent child is being now taught to speak of the rose as "the glory of April and May."

INSTALLATION OF MR. GLADSTONE AT EDINBURGH.—The Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone was installed as Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh on Monday, in the Music Hall, Edinburgh. Sir David Brewster, Principal and Vice-Chancellor, presided, and conferred the degree of LL.D. The installation Mr. Gladstone received the degree of LL.D.—a similar honour being conferred on Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Professor Owen, Professor Ramsay; the Hon. Lord Principal Forbes, of St. Andrews'; and the Rev. H. M. Baird, Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh. The Rector's statue, having been formally introduced as Rector of the University, came forward and delivered his inaugural address, which was received with cheers. He commenced by stating that he meant to speak to the assembled students of the work of the University, and the duties and objects of academic life. He with the view of adapting them in coming themselves for the efforts and labours of after life. He was addressing a liberal audience, and he would traversed the vale of life, laboured under that which succeeded it, and encountered all the difficulties which lay in its small space. Every science was stored, and no small part of that part was performed by Universities which had been established in Scotland by the Reformers, and by the Catholic Christendom. He described the work of the University as covering the whole field of knowledge, and as having for its object the training of man in the whole field of time, in binding together successive generations as they passed in the stream of time, in transmitting the treasures of one age in due proper seed and to reap its proper harvest from what had been sown before; drawing up the past to the present, and the present to the future, and in the domain of mental enterprise; and ever binding the present to pay over to the future, and so on in continual succession. He said that it was true in the olden history of the Universities, they were to knowledge and learning themselves in the midst of the darkness of the world, and there was to the infant nascible classes. The Universities were a great mediating power between the old and the new, and the new and the old, between the speculative and the active between authority and freedom. In countries where the Universities were not free, there was not generally a firm supports of the established order of things; and in countries where they were free, there was a tendency to run towards innovation. After some remarks on the proper mode of Universities, Mr. Gladstone proceeded to discuss the question how far endowments for education were desirable, urging upon students and teachers the duty of bestirring themselves in their own persons to refute the charge that endowments of universities privated rewards torpor as their natural termination. He then impressed upon the students the importance of the acquisition of the knowledge which would be directly serviceable to them in their several professions, and the value of the study of ancient literature, as affording the best means of intellectual training. The address concluded by invoking a blessing upon the University of Edinburgh, and was received with loud applause and applause, his address having lasted nearly an hour and a half in the delivery.

MUSIC.

THE celebrated contralto, Mdme. Borgki-Mamo, appeared for the first time in this country at Her Majesty's Theatre, on Thursday last week, in the character of Leonora, in "La Favorita" of Donizetti. This lady deserves her high reputation. She is an intense and singer of the highest order; beautiful in person; possessed of a magnificent voice, uniting the depth of the contralto with the clearness and flexibility of the soprano; and gifted with great intelligence and feeling. Her pronunciation of the differenting heroine was full of true pathos, and her vocal execution was that of a thorough artist. Her reception was enthusiastic. The character of Fernando was likewise performed by Giuglini, but he being unable to appear, in consequence of indisposition, the part was taken at short notice by Mongini, who sustained it to the full satisfaction of the audience. He is evidently much improved since last year. His first tenor voice is now surpassed by that of any singer of the day, but he had a ballet of overstraining it, of which he appears to be quite got rid, for his singing on this occasion was perfectly smooth and refined. His performance of the romance in "Auguo d'amore," the last scene of the opera, was so sweet and touching that it was loudly encored. The orchestra under the direction of Signor Bevenuti, who has appeared for the first time. He is a Belgian, and his name is Everard, he has been, we are informed, a pupil of Fetis, and is altogether a finished artist. Violetta, now a Frenchman, and really named Violetta—Italian performers as well as Italian pieces are in a minority on our Italian stage—gave great effect to the part of the unfortunate Leonora, for which his concerous bass voice is well fitted. The whole performance of this opera was excellent, and entirely successful. At the same theatre the "Trovatore" was produced on Saturday, with a very strong cast, Mdlle. Titiens being Leonora, Mdme. Borghi-Mamo as Azucena, and Giuglini Manrico. The only novelty was Borghi-Mamo's Azucena, a part which she performed last season at Paris with the greatest success—a success completely merited, for her reading of the character is original and full of poetry. The "Miserere" through the most beautiful scene of the day, still retains its popularity. On Saturday evening it drew a crowded house, and the boxes and stalls were full of distinguished company.

At the Royal Italian Opera "Dinorah" has been repeated till it has become quite a favourite. The celebrated bravura pieces, prima donna, made her first appearance in Beethoven's "Fidelio." Next week we shall notice the lady's debut.

The Grosvenor Musical Society's Concert on Monday evening was good on the whole, though some things admitted into the programme fully merited the severest censure. Amateur performers were not worthy of a classical concert. The orchestra, however, played Mozart's fifth symphony in D, and Auber's overture to the "Domino Noir," remarkably well; as you would expect. Miss Cerely, did herself great honour by an admirable performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor. Herr Ernst, the violinist was not good, though Mrs Parepa took part in it, for she chose trivial things, unworthy of such an artist.

The Morning Concerts of the Musical Union began at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday last, under the direction of Mr. Ella, who, we learn with pleasure, has resumed from his late retirement. The great feature of the concert was the appearance for the first time in England of Herr Joachim, a young pianist of great Continental renown, of which his exquisite performance of one of Beethoven's finest sonatas showed that he is well worthy. This admirable society has this season a very large subscription, and is altogether in a most flourishing condition.

Henry Russell, the eminent composer and vocalist, is engaged in composing an oratorio, called "The Sceptic." We are glad to learn that it is the intention of Mr. Russell to appear before the public in a part of the oratorio.

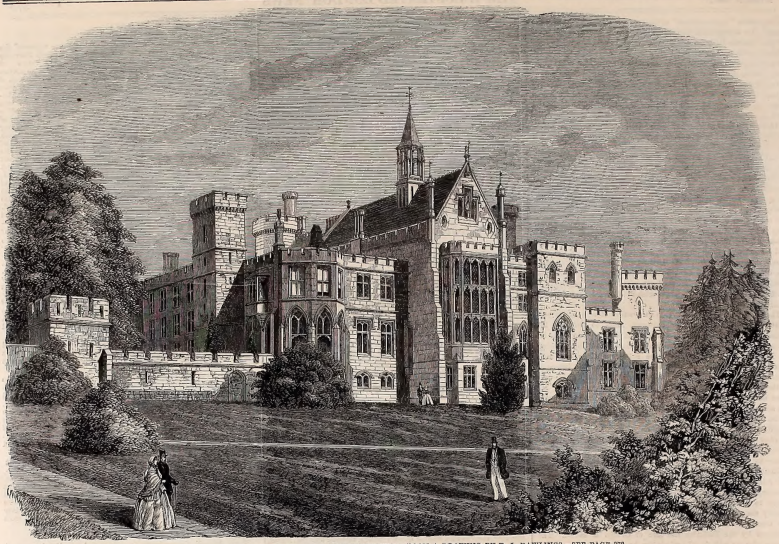
THE THATRES.

There is no event of dramatic importance to record this week beyond the revival of "Much Ado About Nothing" at the Princess's as a part of Mr. Phelps' starring engagement, on Wednesday, which was well acted, and saturly received. The play was previously cut, and Mr. and Mrs. H. Marston took their benefit, as previously announced, at SADLER'S WELLS, when were performed "To Love Chaos," "Tom Noddy's Secret," and "Jack Sheppard." On Monday last two of these plays was excellent. Mrs. Charles Young supported neighbour Courtenay with vigour, Mr. Marston giving more than her representation by his excellent impersonation of Wildrake. Mrs. Marston was, of course, the heroine, and may fairly be considered inimitable. Since Mrs. Glover's death, in fact, she stands alone in such characters. Mr. Addison also appeared as Tom Noddy, and kept the audience in continual laughter. In the after piece Mrs. Marston again appeared as the strong-minded Mrs. Starchold, and realised the character admirably. We are happy to add that the house was crowded.

In consequence of the indisposition of Mrs. Howard Paul, an an engagement has been effected with Miss Julia St. George who will appear at the ADELPHI THEATRE in "Jessie Brown" and "Lucy Lyle" every evening next week, and on Tuesday and Saturday mornings at three.

SHOOTING.

A young girl named Sarah Pratt, a servant in an inn at Dertford, Buckinghamshire, was accidentally shot by a man named Cook, who had been paying his addresses to her without success.



Lord Stanley presided at the dinner given by elected Lieutenant-Colonel Davenport, of Bramhall, a trustee of the Stockport Grammar and Free School, in the room of the late Mr. Marsland. Mr. Davenport has accepted the office, on the ground that his numerous duties forbid his engaging in anything beyond the most pressing claims.

The submarine telegraph cable from Hilbre Island to the Point of Ayr has just been successfully laid down, under the direction of the Irish Sea Company. On the 6th instant, the electric current of communication from the Great Ormshead to Seacombe is now complete and in perfect working order. The Irish Sea Company intend to extend the communication from the Great Ormshead to Colwyn shall be completed.

Lord Stanley presided at the distribution of prizes to the prizes and certificates to the successful candidates at the recent Cambridge Middle-class Examinations. The Rev. Professor Kelland, Vice-Provost, at considerable length, the value of these competitions, as tending to elevate the character of the middle classes, and to place the means of education to boys in pursuing their studies. He recommended that Oxford and Cambridge should be the only examining bodies in these middle-class examinations, by which the country might be divided into two grand sections, to be allotted to each of the Universities.

WORKING MEN'S COLLEGE, BOSTON.—A soiree took place in the Corn Exchange, Boston, on Tuesday last, under the auspices of the Working Men's College, having for its principal object the giving of a public expression of the great interest which is generally felt in the movement from Boston, Massachusetts. About 600 persons sat down to tea. After the tables had been cleared, addresses were delivered, and subscriptions to the than 800 people. The Rev. G. B. Blenkin, Vicar, the principal of the College, was voted to the chair, and delivered an address, in which he gave a brief account of the origin and progress of the college. Addresses were also delivered by means of the Rev. Messrs. Hall, Bowen, Cobb, Ellis, Hall, J. Topham, Dr. Adam, Mr. J. Gadd, Mr. Greenwood, and Mr. Stainland, the last of whom read a letter from Mr. Longfellow, the American poet, present on account of a domestic affliction. The evening's proceedings were enlivened by vocal and instrumental music.

RIFLE COMPETITION.—The following notice has been issued :—"The council of the National Rifle Association have resolved that the chief prize and the gold medal of the association shall be shot for by the volunteers at the National Rifle Association meeting in July next, with a small-bore rifle, at ranges of 500, 600, and 1000 yards, are anxious that the competitors should contend as far as possible on equal terms. This can only be effected by confining them to one description of arm; but, before deciding upon it, the council invite the gunmakers of the United Kingdom to a competition with rifles of a minimum bore of .451, and of a maximum weight of 10lb., the pull of the trigger not being less than 5lb. This competition will take place at Hythe on the 1st of May. The rifle that gives the best proof will be purchased from the exhibition of the arms manufacturer undertaking to supply the required number of forty within two months of that date, and of their being equal in quality to the one so chosen."

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

LOOKING to results, one does not see why the Easter recess should have terminated technically on Thursday week, instead of on Monday. At most public schools, and at the Universities, it takes a week after a vacation to get all the "alumni" up and in working order, and certainly the House of Commons, on this occasion, seems to have required a similar latitude. Very early in the day on Monday Sir Charles Napier and Sir Michael Seymour took their accustomed places, and the portent was in favour of an abundant naval garrulity, the business being the resumption of the Navy Estimates. Next in point of time in putting in appearance was Mr. Cobden, who took his old seat on the second bench below the gangway on the Ministerial side, and whose general aspect gave one no idea of the indisposition from which he was said to be suffering. Except that his hair has become palpably tinged with grey, there was no outward or visible sign of physical deterioration. The House was very thin from the first, and continued so all night. The first of the Ministers who was in his place was Sir Cornewall Lewis; and, when the House glided with infinite quietude to the first order of the day, neither Lord Palmerston nor Lord John Russell was present, though they came in afterwards; and the Opposition bench was singularly empty, Mr. Disraeli not showing at all; and Sir John Pakington giving a very brief attendance, although, as the subject in hand was naval, the most recent ex-First Lord of the Admiralty might have been expected to be one of the audience at least. Before going to the regular work, the most remarkable fact was that Mr. Massey, who signalised himself not long ago by one of the most damaging speeches that has yet been delivered against the Reform Bill, gave notice of his intention to move that that measure be referred to a Select Committee. Who was it that on a previous occasion when a like proposition was mooted exclaimed, "What! refer the British Constitution to a Select Committee?" Any frequenter of the House of late years could not fail to have been struck by the prominency which Captain Leicester Vernon was acquiring in that Assembly. Once in these pages we ventured to say that he was to the Conservative side what Mr. Bernal Osborne is to the Liberal party in the House, there being some resemblance in the styles of the two honourable and gallant gentlemen, although Captain Vernon displayed rather more aplomb. His sudden and melancholy death is well known, and it may here be said that he will be missed in the House of Commons. Independently of his keen and bold speeches, which were never too frequent or too long, and were generally interposed at the right moment, by a sort of prescription which is allowed in a few instances in the House, he was always accustomed to occupy a particular seat. One could not help noticing that on Monday evening one gentleman had the bad taste to take that, the earliest, opportunity of securing the seat, by putting his card over it before prayers. Who the member was we do not know, for he did not complete what was at least a solecism in judgment, if not in feeling, by personal occupation of the place in question during the evening.

The dissertation on this first evening after the return of the Legislature to its duty may be designated as a night with the Admirals. Now, it is not to be denied that it is a rather wonderful exhibition on the part of Sir Charles Napier to speak for nearly two hours, and to run through every topic in detail connected with the Navy. But, somehow, the most patient listener could not but come to the conclusion that there was not much more in the whole business than a relief of the Speaker from the burden of crotchets; while less considerate and more graceless bystanders were heard to murmur a blessing on the excellent founders of Greenwich Hospital, and to breathe out gentle opinions that Sir Charles had become admirably qualified for the Governorship of that veteran institution. Indeed, the talk of the Admirals does not enable one to realise the notion that they could ever have been the men to "shout among the shouting crew," or to "mould, direct, and animate the fight." In our Legislative Assembly few of the members of more advanced age give one so thoroughly the idea of elderly gentlemen as those gallant officers who have only recently hauled down their flags. To be sure on this occasion one of them did favour his audience with a striking and remarkable statement, for he undertook to say deliberately that sailors were, on the whole, rather partial to corporal punishment as an institution, or, at the very least, that they were decidedly opposed to its abolition; which, of course, it is very delightful to learn. On the summing up of the advantages of this debate on the Navy Estimates it may be said that a few practical hints on the manning of our ships of war were certainly gleaned from Mr. Lindsay; and that Mr. Henley was more than ever minutely critical when dealing with the subject of timber, and indeed may be said to have realised a nautical phrase, for he contrived to shiver every inch of timber in every dockyard in the kingdom. As the Government only got three votes in Committee of Supply, it may be very reasonably asserted that not too much was gained by the premature meeting of the House on Monday.

On Tuesday the disinclination to set to work was still more apparent. There was for a time a doubt whether a House would be made; and, when a tolerably good muster of members had been collected, the only eagerness in discussion which was exhibited was in the direction of protesting against going on with anything at all that evening. It may have been only a coincidence, but it was at least matter of observation that some influence was exercised on the House by an event of Tuesday last which, rightly or wrongly, without any question excited great interest in the minds of the British public. The race for the Derby has been designated a national festival. The late and the present Premiers have been, and are, owners of running horses; and the head of the house of Stanley, and the leader of the Conservative party, actually had a horse a favourite for the "blue ribbon of the turf" at the very time when the destinies of England rested on his responsibility. Every one knows that the House of Commons always adjourns for the Derby-day; and Lord Palmerston once in moving that adjournment dignified the occasion by calling it the celebration of the modern Isthmian games. As these games in their ancient form certainly included boxing, it may be supposed that a section of the British reproduction of the ceremonial was in action on Tuesday, for, when a repudiating member asked the Minister responsible for the internal tranquillity of the country whether he had any information to give on the subject of the event of the day, there was a marked sensation among members, and we may be pardoned if we say that in his answer the Home Secretary seemed as if he rather regretted that he was unable to enter into any particulars, although he avowed that he was not ignorant of an outline of the facts. It is certain that there was a visible distaste on the part of legislators to do any work that evening, and an early adjournment was evidently the only alternative against a "count out." It would not be very surprising if some of the American newspapers were to state that the House of Commons adjourned in order, as their manner is, to mark their sense of the coming about of some great, important, and even national occurrence. When Mr. Gladstone returns it is probable that he will soon dissipate any tendency to shirk work which the plenary indulgence of the holidays may have generated in honourable members.

Major-General Orlando Felix died on the 5th inst. at Geneva from bronchitis. He served during the campaign of 1815, and was wounded at Quatre Bras.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military College at Sandhurst will be held at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on Monday, the 4th of June, and following days. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House resumed its sittings after the Easter recess.

Mr. M'Cormick took his seat for the city of Londonderry.

A new writ was moved for Harwich, in the place of Mr. W. F. Campbell, now Lord Stratheden.

The amendments to the Adulteration of Food Bill were considered and agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. CLIVE, leave was given to bring in a bill for taking the census in England.

THE REFORM BILL.—Among the notices given were the two following:—Mr. MASSEY, after the second reading of the Representation of the People Bill, to move, that the bill be committed to a Select Committee. Mr. INGRAM, in Committee on Representation of the People Bill, will move a clause to the following effect:—Every male person of full age and not subject to any legal incapacity, having been a resident for three years or upwards within a city or borough returning a member or members to serve in Parliament, shall, if duly registered, be entitled to vote in the election of a member or members to serve in Parliament for such city or borough: provided always that no such person shall be so registered in any year unless he shall have so resided for twelve calendar months next previous to the last day of July in such year.

THE NAVY ESTIMATES.

On the motion for going into Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates, Sir C. NAPIER entered into an examination of the state of the Navy in most of its details.

Sir J. ELPHINSTONE called attention to the case of the Post Captains on the reserved list, stating the services of a great number of the officers of that rank, and urging their claim to regular promotion and increase of pay.

Mr. LINDSAY admitted that the services of the officers of the Navy were ill paid by their half-pay, but still the expense of this item in the estimates was enormous. It was time that the whole question of the reserved and retired list was looked into, as it now worked unsatisfactorily both to the officers and the country. In order to prevent the present overplus of unemployed officers something should be done to raise a new class of inferior officers from among the petty officers, who would do the duty now done by midshipmen—a course which would induce good men from the merchant service to enter the Navy. He believed the plans recommended by the Commission on Manning the Navy would not succeed, but that some system should be adopted which would render the transition from the merchant service to the Navy more ready. He strongly protested against the growing expenditure for the Navy. He especially dwelt on the expenditure in dockyards.

Sir M. SEYMOUR having made some very practical observations,

Sir J. PAKINGTON urged that the claims of the Post Captains on the reserved list should be taken into consideration.

Sir F. BARING on this point stated that the warrant under which the reserved list was created had not been properly construed.

Mr. HENLEY entered into an examination of the report of a committee appointed by the Admiralty to inquire into the expenditure of the dockyards, urging that the authorities of the Admiralty had given no reply to the grave charges made in that report with regard to mismanagement and undue expenditure. He especially dwelt on a statement with reference to the deficiency of timber in the dockyards.

Mr. W. WILLIAMS contended that the Admiralty should take some steps to correct the system which their own officials had reported against, and which went to show that there was in the dockyards an unnecessary expense amounting to 20 per cent. He pointed out that the expenditure on the English Navy since 1851 amounted to £86,000,000, while the expense of that of France was only £46,000,000.

Sir H. LEEKE, in the course of observations on the general subject, stated that from his personal knowledge he could state that the seamen of the Navy did not desire the entire abolition of corporal punishment.

After some remarks from Admiral WALCOTT and Mr. BENTINCK,

The House went into Committee.

On the first vote put, £160,280 for the Board of Admiralty,

Lord C. PAGET rose to reply to the various statements which had been made.

Sir H. WILLOUGHBY rose to order, and inquired whether a general statement could be made on the consideration of a specific vote.

The Chairman said that that course was not usual or convenient.

Sir J. PAKINGTON complained of the course taken by the noble Lord, which, in fact, precluded his replying to the important statements which had been made.

Lord PALMERSTON said that the rule laid down was not usually strictly enforced; and, in fact, the course taken was more convenient, and would enable a fuller discussion on the various questions raised.

After some discussion,

Lord C. PAGET was attempting to go into the general questions raised, when, having been again called to order, he merely moved the vote above stated.

Sir C. NAPIER made a series of objections to the constitution of the Board of Admiralty, and to the constant change of its members, as well as to the mode in which its patronage was distributed.

Mr. W. WILLIAMS asked the cause of the increase in the vote this year.

Lord C. PAGET said that all the appointments to commands were made by the unanimous assent of the whole board. The increase in the establishment arose simply from the amount of work required consequent on the great activity in the adding to the strength of the Navy.

The vote was agreed to.

The next vote, £287,725, for the Coast Guard, Naval Coast Volunteers, and Royal Naval Reserve, was, after some discussion, agreed to.

A sum of £64,332, for the scientific branch, was also agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

In answer to the Earl of Malmesbury, Lord WODEHOUSE said that application had been made for compensation and redress for the outrage committed on board the Medina at Leghorn. The Government of Tuscany had expressed its readiness to grant the compensation, the amount of which remained to be settled.

On the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, a number of bills relating to the consolidation of the criminal law were referred to a Select Committee.

The Oxford University Bill and the Municipal Corporation Mortgage Bill were read a second time.

LAW OF DIVORCE.—The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of the Divorce Court Bill, the object of which was to amend the present law of divorce, by giving power to the Judge Ordinary to deal with divorces "a vinculo matrimonii," but calling in the assistance of another Judge if he thought fit. Appeals were given in certain cases to the full Court. A power was also given to the Queen's Proctor to appear in certain cases by direction of the Court.—Lord ST. LEONARDS objected to such a power as the absolute dissolution of marriage by a single Judge. He thought the bill should be referred to a Select Committee.—Lord LYNDHURST pointed out the immense accumulation of the business of the Divorce Court, which could not be disposed of by the present judicial force. He urged that quite as great interests as those of divorce were committed in other courts to a single Judge.—After some further discussion the bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

In answer to Mr. Hennessy, Mr. CARDWELL said that there was considerable destitution in the west of Ireland; but there was room in the union workhouse of the district, and it was believed that the ordinary action of the poor law would be sufficient to meet the emergency.

In answer to a question from Mr. Hadfield, which caused much laughter, Sir G. C. LEWIS said that he had heard that a "prize fight" had taken place in Hampshire that day, but he was unable to say whether the police interfered. He could not say, until he had received further information, whether the Government would take any steps with regard to the persons attending the fight.

In answer to questions Lord PALMERSTON said that the Navy Estimates would come on on Thursday and the Reform Bill on Monday.

Sir J. TRELAWNY complained of the change which had taken place in his absence in the arrangements of the business of the House, by fixing orders of the day for Thursdays, as it interfered with his Church-rate Bill. Some discussion took place as to the order of business, but no definite arrangement was come to.

Mr. PAULL obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law relating to malicious injuries to property, the object being to prevent injuries to engines in mines.

Mr. M'MAHON obtained leave to bring in a bill to assimilate the law of Ireland to that of England as to the mode of fixing the close season for salmon and trout.

The Adulteration of Food Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The other business was then disposed of.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

CONVEYANCE OF VOTERS BILL.

The second reading of this bill, the object of which is to render payments for the conveyance of voters illegal, was moved by Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. NEWDEGATE moved its rejection on the ground that it would disfranchise a number of perfectly uncorrupt voters.

Sir G. C. LEWIS advised that the bill should be referred to a Select Committee on corrupt practices at elections, or at least that its consideration should be deferred until after the report of that Committee.

Mr. HENLEY agreed in the advisability of this course, and moved the adjournment of the debate.

A discussion followed on the question of postponement or not; and, Mr. Newdegate having withdrawn his amendment, a division was taken for the adjournment of the debate, which was carried by 94 to 81.

ATTORNEYS, SOLICITORS, PROCTORS, AND CONVEYANCERS BILL.

Mr. MURRAY moved the second reading of this bill, a measure which had come down from the House of Lords, and the object of which is to improve the professional status of attorneys and solicitors.

Mr. KNIGHT moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months, and urged that it gave enormous power to the Incorporated Law Society, and repealed the statute which prevented practising attorneys acting as justices of the peace. He did not object to the educational clauses of the bill.

Mr. J. LOCKE opposed the bill, pointing out some objectionable clauses.

Mr. E. JAMES contended that the bill taxed attorneys to the extent of £5000 a year, which sum was to be placed at the disposal of the Incorporated Society. He objected to the clauses which enabled attorneys to act as justices of the peace, which gave them liens in property recovered or "preserved" for their clients—a term quite unintelligible—and which proposed to allow interest on attorneys' bills which were not paid within three months.

Mr. MONTAGUE SMITH supported the general principle of the bill; and, although there were some clauses which would be better omitted in Committee, he did not think they were of such a nature as to prevent the second reading.

Mr. B. OSBORNE thought that solicitors were quite able to protect themselves without any additional Acts of Parliament to aid in their protection. The provision as to certificated conveyancers would be very injurious to that body, and the clause ought to be made prospective, and not retrospective.

Mr. A. MILLS said that the educational clauses of the bill entitled it to a second reading, whatever objections might be taken to its other provisions.

Mr. LOWE objected especially to the clause which allowed attorneys to charge interest on their bills without notice to their clients. He complained of the course taken by the House of Lords in not dealing with a bill relating to attorneys brought in by Mr. Locke, which had been sent up to them, and sending down another which contained the same provisions with the addition of objectionable clauses, which would be struck out in this House, so that this bill would go back in identically the same shape as the one which had been already sent up to the other House.

Mr. BOVILL said that Mr. Locke's bill was in fact only a copy of a bill sent down by the Lords last Session. He had ascertained that the promoters of the bill would consent to make the clause relating to conveyancers prospective. The general principle of the bill was every way worthy of support.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL agreed in most of the objections which had been taken to the bill, but thought it might properly be read a second time.

Mr. HADFIELD objected to the power given to the Incorporated Law Society to deal with a sum of £5000 a year at their irresponsible will. He should reluctantly vote for the second reading.

Mr. S. ESTCOURT thought the bill should be rejected, in order that the House of Lords might be induced to deal with a bill on the same subject which had been sent up to them.

Mr. G. DENMAN supported the second reading.

Mr. HENLEY did not think the objection to the bill founded on the course taken by the House of Lords was sufficient to prevent the second reading; but there were some of its provisions which he should oppose in Committee.

On a division the second reading was carried by a majority of 162, the numbers being 191 to 29.

JEWS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

On the motion for the second reading of this bill, the object of which is to do away with the necessity for moving a special resolution dispensing with the ordinary oath on the admission of a Jewish member to Parliament,

Mr. NEWDEGATE moved its rejection. He said that the Jews were already admitted to that House, and what more was wanted? It was a violation of an arrangement between the two Houses of Parliament.

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE said that the Jews were certainly admitted, but in a manner disgraceful to a Christian assembly. He denied that the present arrangement was binding on the present Parliament.

Mr. KNIGHTLEY thought that the existing practice was inconvenient and discreditable, and the mode of admitting Jewish members was ungracious and ungenerous. Still he thought it unadvisable to reopen the question, and probably to revive antagonism on the subject between the two Houses.

After a few words from Mr. HENLEY, objecting to the bill, a division followed, and the second reading was carried by 117 to 75.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

THE REFORM BILL.

Earl GREY moved that "a Select Committee be appointed to inquire what would be the probable increase in the number of electors in the counties and boroughs of England and Wales from a reduction of the franchise; and whether any or what change is likely to be made in the character of the constituencies by such an increase; also to inquire what difference there was between large and small constituencies in respect of the proportion of the registered electors who usually vote at contested elections; and into the causes of any such differences which may be found to exist; and likewise into the means by which elections in very large constituencies are practically determined, and into the expense incurred in conducting them." He thought that the Reform Bill was so distasteful to the public that there was very little chance of its passing this Session. There were many points upon which he thought the House ought to have information, and that information could only be obtained through the medium of a Committee. He was of opinion that there was no great occasion for any Reform Bill at present, believing that under the present system all classes of the public were fairly represented.

The Duke of ARGYLL said the Government would not oppose the motion under the impression that it was made with all sincerity, and not with any intention unnecessarily to impede the progress of the measure then before the other House of Parliament.

A discussion then ensued, in the coure of which

The Earl of DERBY said that he did not object to any extension of the franchise to the working classes, so long as the people were fit to exercise the privilege of electors; but the bill of the Government looked only to numbers, without regard to fitness at all. As the motion had been assented to by the Government, if the Committee were to be of any utility the Reform Bill must await the report of such Committee. He therefore hoped that both that and the other House of Parliament would await the termination of the inquiry before they proceeded further with the bill.

After some further discussion the motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. HORSMAN, on the motion for going into Committee of Supply, proceeded to call the attention of the House to the state of our relations with foreign Powers, and to ask some explanations on the subject from the Government. He wished to know, in the first place, whether the last despatch of M. Thouvenel had been replied to, and, if so, whether the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs thought it consistent with his duty to lay a copy of such reply upon the table of the House. He desired further to know what was the exact position of the question of the annexation of Savoy—whether that was now considered by her Majesty's Government as a settled question, in respect to which nothing further was to be said, or whether any further negotiations were going on on the subject? And, lastly, he asked what was the principle upon which our foreign policy was to be conducted in reference to the obligations incurred under recent treaties, and a regard to the general interests, as well as the general safety, of Europe? The right hon. gentleman, in a speech of considerable length, reviewed the policy of France for the purpose of showing that that policy was one of aggrandisement, and that it behoved the Government of this country to send forth their solemn protest against the annexation of Savoy as an aggression on the part of that Power.

Mr. DUFF considered that this country was not properly represented in Paris by Lord Cowley, and suggested that he should be removed.

Lord J. RUSSELL deprecated the language used by Mr. Horsman towards the Goverment of France. He thought that the proper course for the right hon. gentleman to pursue would be to have raised such an issue as would have enabled him to take the management of our foreign affairs into his own hands, instead of making a speech that could have no practical result. If the honour and interest of this country were concerned it would have been the duty of the Government to have made a solemn protest against the annexation of Savoy; but, as such were not involved, the Government did not consider it a case for a protest. He had sent a despatch to M. Thouvenel explaining the reasons why they could not concur in the annexation, and he had gone very fully into the matter; but M. Thouvenel contented himself with making a note that the communication did not amount to a protest. No answer had been received as yet to such despatch; but when the papers upon the subject were laid upon the table it would be seen that the Government were not unmindful of the honour and interests of England.

After some further conversation,

Lord PALMERSTON defended Lord Cowley from the attack made on him by Mr. Duff, and passed a high eulogium on the ability with which he managed the affairs of this country during a most critical time, and in one of the most important Courts of Europe.

Mr. KINGLAKE objected to Mr. Horsman's views regarding a protest under the circumstances referred to, as that, indeed, would have ended the matter much to the satisfaction of M. Thouvenel, but not at all to the satisfaction or the interests of England.

The subject then dropped.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.—Mr. SALOMONS asked the Government whether their attention was drawn to a return in the Gazette on Friday last in regard to the reduction of the Bank reserve, a movement which could not be traced to ordinary mercantile causes?—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said that there were returns on the table which would show that the diminution was caused by an eminent firm drawing a large number of £1000 notes.

The House then went into a Committee of Supply, and the remainder of the evening was devoted to a consideration of the Navy Estimates.

On Monday Vice-Admiral H. W. Bruce, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, with Major-General S. R. Wesley, Deputy Adjutant-General of the Marine Forces, concluded their inquiry relative to the late disturbance on board the Edgar, at Spithead. The report of the inquiry will be forwarded to the Admiralty.

THE FARM.

Mr. Robert Bond's very reasonable proposition—to the effect that, "if Mr. Mechi will kindly consent to submit his entire agricultural account, from the first purchase of the Tiptree Hall estate to the present time, to three competent and impartial men, I will guarantee to pay £100 to the Agricultural Benevolent College Fund in the event of their pronouncing that Mr. Mechi has made one sixpence in profit during his seventeen years' experience as landlord and tenant"—has not been responded to. It was made on March 30, and on April 12 a letter appeared from Mr. Mechi in the Times, merely observing that he had long ceased to expect to convince people against their will, and that he could afford to "pass by without anger the petty nibblings of fractional or prejudiced objectors." Nothing could be more conciliatory than the tone of Mr. Bond's letter; but, drawing his deductions from Mr. Mechi's own published statement, he calculated that gentleman's annual loss, "as landlord and tenant," at £38 8s. 4d.!

The Royal Agricultural Society's committee of inspection commenced their Yorkshire circuit on Tuesday. It is purposed, if Doncaster is successful, to construct a branch railway across the Carr to the racecourse, so as to land the stock and implements close to the showyard. Harrogate and Wakefield are now candidates, and Hull holds out as an inducement that the owners of its hundred steamers will make arrangements to bring over an enormous number of foreigners at very low fares. The committee of inspection consists of the Hon. W. G. Cavendish, M.P.; Sir W. W. Wynn, Bart.; and Messrs. Brandreth Gibbs, Fisher Hobbs, and Milward; and they hold their first court on Doncaster Moor. The blood-horses ought to muster stronger than they are wont to do generally, if this classic battle-ground is selected for their more peaceful rivalry.

The shorthorn spirit seems to wax stronger and stronger, and new herds are springing up everywhere. We may mention, for the benefit of bigotry in general, that one of the greatest admirers of Booth blood lately made an offer to Colonel Towneley for his Frederick, which was declined, as he does not wish to let him. Mr. Douglas has had an arrival of heifer calves from Rose of Sharon, Playful, Polly Gwynne, and Bona Fortuna, the two first of which now stand in the Athelstaneford Herd-book as "Rose of Spring" and "Lady of the Vale." His Cherry Queen and Lady Helen have bull calves, and all six are by Sir James the Rose. Mr. Barnes has named his bull-calf from Baroness "The Druid;" and we hear that during the Dublin Show week he was quite proof against a 150-guinea offer from a great English breeder for a Dr. M'Hale calf only a fortnight old.

One of the most valuable papers that ever appeared on sheep was read lately by Mr. Charles Howard, of Beddenhams, Beds, at the London Farmers' Club, which is assuming such an important position, by the increase in its numbers and the impetus, it is giving to agricultural discussion, that we hope to see it ere long in a new home of its own. With the exception of the Leicesters, of which so much has been written already, Mr. Howard gave a very succinct analysis of the qualities of all the leading breeds of sheep. He mentioned, among other incidents in connection with the Cotswolds, that between 3000 and 4000 rams are annually disposed of, and that Mr. Garne sold one weighing 86lb. per quarter at the last Christmas Cattle Show for £8 10s. The Lincolns, which partake very largely of the Cotswold frame and Leicester frame, but far exceed them both in the weight of their fleeces, have been known to reach a still greater size; and it is on record that, in 1826, Mr. Dawson, of Withcall, killed a three-shear weighing 96½lb., a two-shear of 91lb., and a shearling of 71lb., per quarter. The weight of wool of an entire flock under fair average management is about 8½lb. a fleece, and in some cases, especially on good layer, this weight is exceeded. Mr. John Clarke's Lincoln prize ram clipped 51¾lb. in three years, while a neighbour of his, in 1859, clipped 327 hogget fleeces which weighed altogether 130 tods—an average of over 11lb. per fleece. The progress which sheep crosses have made in this country is proved by the competition at the Smithfield Club, where prizes for them were first established in 1843. During the first nine years the average number of pens was only eight and a half, but in the last eight years they have averaged within a fraction of seventeen; while the Leicesters for the first nine years averaged nineteen pens, but have sunk to seventeen during the last eight. "A Sheep-feeder for Many Years," writing in the Mark-lane Express, gives the following hint about feeding:—"I have heard of many losses of sheep that have been fed on corn and cake. Many farmers give corn with chaff, and after that hay, swedes, and other roots; those who have done so have had losses, and cannot account for them. Now, I believe that if they gave the sheep corn and cake the very first thing in the morning, without anything with them, and all the corn at one time in the day, they would not have many losses, and their sheep would improve very fast."

Fight for the Championship.—The great international contest between John C. Heenan, the Benicia Boy, and Thomas Sayers, the Champion of England, took place on Tuesday, with no more definite result than the severe punishment of both the combatants. At four o'clock in the morning a motley mob was conveyed from the London-bridge station to the scene of action, and a ring was quickly formed at Ash, near Farnborough, on the borders of the counties of Surrey and Hants. The fight lasted more than two hours, during which time between thirty and forty rounds were fought, the pugilists battering one another with most astounding tenacity, endurance, and ferocity. Sayers drew first blood, and Heenan gave the first knock-down blow, incidents of considerable importance or interest, it seems, in fisticuff combats. The Benicia Boy was nearly blinded. Sayers did not show many signs of punishment; but his right arm—his "auctioneer," as he terms it—was much injured by his attempts to ward off Heenan's tremendous blows, and entirely useless to him the greater portion of the fight. Once Heenan well-nigh strangled his antagonist, getting the neck of Sayers across the rope, and pressing his head down. The last two or three rounds were fought amidst great confusion, the police, after several vain attempts, having at length succeeded in interrupting the fight at a time when a single blow from either of the combatants might have decided the day.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Although the foreign exchanges, almost generally, are favourable to this country, and although about £100,000 in gold has been sent into the Bank of England, money for commercial purposes still continues high in price. The demand for it has certainly been less active than last week; nevertheless, the lowest quotations for first-class bills are as follows:—Sixty days', 4⅞ 5; three months', 5; four months', 5½ ¾; and six months', 6 to 6½ per cent; whilst the discount-houses continue to offer 4 per cent for money "at call."

More than ordinary attention has been directed to the last Bank return, which shows a very large increase in the circulation of notes. In some quarters it has been assumed that a combination has existed amongst the discount-houses to obtain possession of a large amount in notes, in order to cripple the Bank's resources. We may observe, however, that no such combination has existed, and that only one house has deemed it necessary to hold something like £1,500,000 as the result of the continued refusal of the Directors of the Bank to grant discount-accommodation upon bills previously discounted. The amount in notes here referred to having been repaid to the Bank, the matter is now virtually at an end—certainly for the present.

As there is now every reasonable prospect of a steady increase in the supply of gold in the Bank of England, and as we may look forward to considerable loss in the Discount Market, confidence amongst the operators on the Stock Exchange has been restored.

More business has been done in Home Stocks than for some time past, and prices have had an upward tendency. The Unfounded Debt, however, has been heavy; but the operations in Indian Securities have increased to some extent, even though they have not had much influence upon the quotations.

The remainder of the Victoria loan of £2,650,000, unallotted last week, has been taken up. At the last biddings the tenders, about 230 in number, were for a total of £1,451,000, the highest being at 106, the lowest 105. The Debentures have been done at 105⅜ to 105⅝.

The new Austrian loan has turned out a failure. Out of the £20,000,000 required, only about £7,500,000 has been subscribed for; but it is presumed that a portion of the remainder will be taken by the Bank of Vienna.

Scarcely any gold has been sent away to the Continent. The total imports have amounted to about £200,000, chiefly from Australia. The silver market is flat, at 5s. 1⅝d. per ounce standard. The shipments to the East by the present packet are £463,458 in silver, and £62,937 in gold. This is the largest shipment made for some time past, but we understand that the whole of it is on merchants' account.

The total gold coinage at the Mint last year was £2,649,509, being more than double the sum in 1858.

The directors of the Oriental Bank have declared a dividend and bonus equal to 17 per cent for the past year. The balance carried to the reserve fund is £11,808.

The plan for the establishment of a "Great Northern Palace Company (Limited)," with the view to the formation of a "Palace for the People," at Muswell-hill, has been favourably received by the public. The capital required—£400,000 in shares and £200,000 in debentures—has been subscribed, and the shares have been done at ⅛ to ½ prem. The railway companies, especially the Great Northern, are offering great facilities to the public by laying down additional lines of railway, and the project is likely to prove highly successful. The estate consists of 450 acres, of which 350 are to be appropriated to the palace and grounds. All subscribers for ten shares have secured to them the privilege of a free admission into the palace.

Home Stocks were somewhat firm on Monday, and prices ruled a shade higher. Bank Stock sold at 223 to 224; India Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 98; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103½ ¾; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents were done at 96½ ¼; Consols, for Money, 94⅜ ⅝ ½; Ditto, for Account, 94⅝ ⅝ ⅞; Long Annuities, 1885, 17½ ⅜; India Five per Cents, 105⅜ ½; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅞; Ditto, 1859, 96⅞ ⅝; and Exchequer Bills, 7s. to 11s. prem. Very little change took place in the quotations on Tuesday, and the market closed as follows:—Bank Stock, 223; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93½; Consols, for Money, 94⅝ ½; Ditto, for Account, 94⅝ ⅝; Long Annuities, 17⅛; India Five per Cents, 105½; Ditto Five per Cent Paper, 98½; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103¾; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 96⅞; Ditto Bonds, 5s. dis.; and Exchequer Bills, 7s to 11s. prem. Prices were on the advance on the following day, and Consols touched 94⅞ ⅞; the Reduced and New Three per Cents were 93½ ⅛; Long Annuities, 17⅝ ½; India Five per Cents, 105⅝ ¾; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅞; Ditto Bonds, 8s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 7s. to 11s. prem. Bank Stock was 223½ to 225; India Stock, 220 to 219; Ditto Five per Cent Enfaced Paper, 97⅞ to 98½; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103¾ ⅝ ⅞. On Thursday, the market was again firm. Consols were dealt in at 94⅞ to 95 for money, and 95 to ⅛ for the account; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents sold at 93½ ⅛; India Debentures, 96⅞ to 97⅛; Exchequer Bills, 8s. to 12s. prem.; India Stock was 221; Ditto, New Loan, 106½ ⅝; Five per Cent Enfaced Paper, 98½ ½; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103¾ to 104. The Debentures were 96⅞ to 97⅛.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange, April 16.—Our market to-day was scantily supplied with English wheat, in which a steady business was transacted, at an advance in the quotations of 2s. per quarter. There was an improved feeling in the inquiry for Foreign wheat, at 1s. to 2s. per quarter more money. Floating cargoes of grain supported previous rates; but the transactions in them were by no means numerous. The malt trade was in a sluggish state; nevertheless, factors were firm in their demands. There was a steady inquiry for oats, at extreme rates. Both beans and peas were quite as dear as last week. The flour trade was firm, at 2s. to 3s. per 28 lb. more money.

April 18.—The supplies of each kind of produce in to-day's market were very moderate. Generally speaking, the trade ruled steady, at fully Monday's quotations.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 43s. to 54s.; ditto, white, 45s. to 59s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s to 54s.; rye, 30s. to 31s.; grinding barley, 28s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 31s. to 32s; malting ditto, 30s. to 45s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt 60s. to 70s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s; Kingston and Ware, 56s. to 70s.; Chevalier, 70s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s. to 26s.; potato ditto, 27s. to 30s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 21s. to 26s.; ditto, white, 22s. to 28s.; tick beans, 34s. to 36s.; grey peas, 33s. to 35s.; maple, 37s. to 38s.; white, 36s. to 39s.; boilers, 38s. to 40s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 43s. to 46s.; town households, 40s. to 41s.; country marks, 34s. to 36s. per 280lb. American flour, 25s. to 29s. per barrel; French ditto, 32s. to 40s. per sack.

Seeds.—Clover seed is in improved request, and the turn dearer. Most other seeds move off slowly, at late quotations.

Linseed, English, crushing, 54s. to 58s.; Calcutta, 51s. to 52s.; hempseed, 37s. to 40s. per quarter; coriander, 14s. to 16s. per. cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 14s.; ditto, white, 11s to 14s.; tares, 7s. to 7s. 6d. per bushel. English rapeseed, 62s. to 66s. per quarter. Linseed cakes, English, £9 10s. to £10 10s.; ditto foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 0s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 50s. to 54s. per quarter; red clover 44s. to 45s.; white ditto, 80s. to 87s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d. to 8d.; of household ditto, 5½d. to 7d. per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 49s. 1d.; barley, 37s. 2d.; oats, 24s. 2d.; rye, 33s. 10d.; beans, 59s. 9d.; peas, 38s. 3d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 46s. 6d.; barley, 36s. 9d.; oats, 23s. 6d.; rye, 33s. 9d.; beans, 29s. 8d.; peas, 37s. 11d.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 94,086; barley, 21,913; oats, 9536; rye, 62; beans, 1974; peas, 793 quarters.

Tea.—The public sales have gone off heavily, and prices almost generally have given way 1d. to 2d. per lb. The market, privately, is in a very inactive state, at almost nominal quotations.

Sugar.—Nearly all raw qualities have moved off heavily, at a decline in value of from 6d. to 1s. per cwt. Several parcels of foreign offered at public sale have been withdrawn. Refined sugars are dull, at 51s. to 51s. 6d. for brown lumps. Crushed and pieces support previous rates.

Coffee.—On the whole the demand has been much less active, and, in some instances, prices have ruled a shade lower than last week. The stock is about 5000 tons.

Rice.—Rather more money has been paid for good and useful qualities, and other kinds are firm in price.

Provisions.—There is very little doing in Irish butter, at about previous quotations. Cork qualities have realised 80s. to 100s. per cwt. Foreign parcels are quite as dear as last week, and English support previous rates. Bacon is again rather dearer, Waterford, landed, having changed hands at 58s. to 65s. Lard is steady in price.

Tallow.—The demand is very inactive, yet scarcely any change has taken place in the quotations. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 56s. 6d.; for delivery during the last three months, 51s. 9d. per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is quoted at 27s. 9d. to 28s. per cwt. on the spot. Other oils move off slowly, at about previous rates. Spirits of turpentine, 35s 6d. to 36s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—We have no change to notice in the value of rum—proof Leewards having sold at 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d. per gallon. Brandy is firm in price; but the demand for it is by no means active. Grain spirits are quite as dear as last week.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s. to £4 17s. 6d.; clover ditto, £4 0s. to £5 15s.; and straw £1 7s. to £1 14s. per load.

Coals.—Best house coals, 21s. to 21s. 6d.; seconds, 18s. 6d. to 19s. 6d.; and manufacturers', 15s. 9d. to 16s per ton.

Hops.—Good and useful qualities are in fair request, at full quotations. In other kinds very little is doing, at late rates.

Wool.—The next public sales of Colonial—at which about 50,000 bales will be offered—are appointed to commence on the 3rd of May. By private contract next to nothing is doing.

Potatoes.—The supplies are moderate, and the demand is far from active, at from 83s. to 160s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market.—(Thursday, April 19).—Although only a moderate supply of beasts was on sale in to-day's market, the demand for all breeds ruled very inactive, at Monday's decline in the quotations. The show of sheep was rather limited; nevertheless, the mutton trade was less active, on former terms. We have to report a very dull sale for lambs, at from 4d. to 6d. per 8lb. less money. The quotations ranged from 5s. 6d. to 7s. per per 8lb. Calves were heavy, and 4d. to 6d. per 8lb. cheaper—the top figure being 5s. 6d. In pigs, very little was passing, on former terms; and milch cows were very dull. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 2d. to 3s. 4d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 10d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 4d.; prime Scots, &c., 4s. 6d. to 4s. 8d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 4d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 0d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 10d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; lambs, 5s. 6d. to 7s. 0d.; suckling calves, 18s. to 23s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 24s. to 30s. each. EXTENSION OF THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH TO CANTON, HONG-KONG, ETC., FROM THE PORT OF RANGOON.—PROJECTED BY CAPTAIN R. SPRYE AND SONS.

OVERLAND TELEGRAPH TO CANTON, SHANGHAI, &c.,

AND DIRECT COMMERCE WITH WESTERN INLAND CHINA.

We submit to our readers in this Number, reduced to meet our space, the British Pegu portion of the Map of Middle Asia, constructed by Captain Sprye, to show the geographical part of the proposition which he and his sons have submitted to her Majesty's Ministers for extending the English and Indian Telegraph from Eastern Pegu overland to Canton and the other open ports of China, and for establishing direct commerce with the now commercially unknown western and west central provinces of China proper, from our port of Rangoon, in the Bay of Bengal, by a cheap rail or tram road therefrom across Eastern Pegu to our extreme north-eastern territorial limit, in the direction of the Chinese frontier cities of Esmok and Poer.

The original map, embracing from Aden in the west to Pekin in the east, and from Singapore in the south to Tartary in the north, measures 6 feet by 3½ feet, and shows all the lines of telegraph and railway throughout British India, from Aden to Tongho in Eastern Pegu, distinguishing those of each which are completed, constructing, and sanctioned. But the portion in our paper shows only the line of Indian telegraph from Calcutta to Arracan, across the Arracan range to Prome, down the Irrawaddy valley of Western Pegu to the port of Rangoon, and up thence again north through Eastern Pegu to our now north-eastern frontier military station of Tongho.

This last section of the existing telegraph will be observed to pass from Rangoon to the ancient capital of Pegu, and thence by Sittang, Shoe-Gyen, and Mong, to Tongho. The proposition of the Messrs. Sprye is that wires for the open ports of China shall branch off from Shoe-Gyen, in a direction more easterly than Tongho, to our extreme north-east boundary near the Salween River, or wherever our boundary may prove to be; that treaty arrangements shall be entered into between our Queen and the King of Burmah for the extension of the wires from such our extreme frontier limit across his Majesty's two Shan States of Kiang-Tung and Kiang-Hung to the Chinese south-western frontier city of Esmok; thence, under treaty arrangement between our Queen and the Emperor of China, the wires to be continued along the Imperial high road, through the valley of the Pearl River to Canton, and thence onward to Hong-Kong and all the open ports.

Looking to the shortness of this land distance from Shoe-Gyen to Canton compared with the ocean distance from Rangoon, down the Straits of Malacca, round Singapore, up to Hong-Kong, and to the Straits of Malacca, round Singapore, up to Hong-Kong, and to the perpetually-recurring injuries telegraphic cables will be there liable to sustain from the storms of those seas, and from the Malay and Chinese pirates infesting them, we consider the labours of the Captain and his sons to establish the telegraph overland to Canton well deserving the favourable consideration of Kingsoo Phya and power to encourage works of peace and of world-wide utility. To place clearly before our readers the views of the Burmese Minister with which we think it right to quote the conclusion of their introduction to a pamphlet which they are now circulating. Referring to their as yet non-existent diplomatic relations with Ministers with the national importance of their propositions, they proceed to say, "But the treaty of Yun-Tain having been negociated more rapidly than was expected, the opening of Western China and its communications across Eastern Pegu was brought to China to our commerce across Eastern Pegu was brought to China to our commerce across Eastern Pegu was brought to China to our commerce across Eastern Pegu by making it the route for the transit of our trade over a country unfettered. Yet the quick-following disastrous repulse of our Minister from the mouth of the Yang-tsze seems for us to make probable the negotiation of a fresh or supplemental treaty with China. The points most likely to be urged upon the Ministry are:—1st, which we have more particularly urged upon the Ministry are:—1st, As respects China, to have Esmok made, by treaty, an open frontier gate for overland trade, subject to the same duties and rules as those fixed for the open ports, with a resident British Consul; and to have the electric telegraph set up from Esmok down the Pearl River valley to Canton and on, through land, to Hong-Kong and all the open ports, and to whatever point may be made the residence of her Majesty's Minister to China. As respects Burmah, to send an Envoy from her Majesty to that King, to promote friendly relations between the two Courts; and to negotiate for a commercial right of way, by the most direct line, with moderate duties, from Northeastern Pegu to Esmok; and for the extension of our telegraph from that point of our frontier to the Chinese frontier city, 3rd. As respects Siam, to instruct her Majesty's Consul at Bankok to negotiate for the cession of the border shore and the Island ascendant to the cession of the border shore and the Island ascendant to the on by the Siam chief to the Treaty settlement with Burmah of their northern boundary, and with us of their western boundary; restricting this last to the Tenasserim coast, and right limit—the mouth of the Tanen-Taung-Daw range. 4th. And as respects Pegu, to have a clause made in the treaty for railway construction by the most direct route, from the port of Rangoon, by the ancient capital of Pegu on the river of that name, to the more northern town of Shoe-Pegu on the river of that name, to the more northern town of Shoe-Gyen on the River Sittang; and thence, by the most easy engineering line, to our north-eastern frontier, on or near to the right or left bank of the large and inhospitable river of impassable falls and rapids—the Salween."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

This last two days of the Craven Meeting lent much of their interest from the fact of the Claret and Port Stakes being both walked over for. Mr. Tom Brocck was in good force as a matcher, and must have considered himself a luckier man than even the lucky Joseph when he saw Loiterer beaten so easily by Richmond; and Lord Stamford's two colts likewise kept up their 1882 prestige. Summerside fell a prey to Red Eagle at Catterick Bridge; and the Thirsk Meeting, with some good old-fashioned Hunters' Stakes to help it, bravely held its own.

Newmarket First Spring has next week entirely to itself. Besides the Two Thousand Stakes—in which the meeting of Lambton and The Wizard is looked for with no small interest, now that Buccaneer is scratched, and Lily Agnes is likely to start—there are no races of any importance on Tuesday. Munjid, Emily, North Lincoln, and Actress are in a half-mile spirt on Wednesday; and Thormanby has to concede to Mr. Beaufort's Petrichor, and Cotherstone to another 50 sov. stakes. The One Thousand on Thursday comprehends Contessina, Lowlander, Kilconey Provision, and Lily Agnes in a very clashing style of filly in her two-year-old season. The Newmarket Two-Year-Old Plate, which Wallace has to ride for his sire, is fixed for the same day; and High Treason is in the Newmarket Stakes on Friday. Another of the old school of turfites has departed in Mr. Osborne Hamilton. He was in his seventy-fourth year, and owned the flying miller, Rattrap, who deceived so many supporters at Epsom in the Derby season of 1865.

The Rufford sale was, on the whole, a great success, although some of the brothers and 2 of the old hounds were parted with before their value. About a dozen masters of hounds and fifteen or sixteen huntsmen were present, including the veteran Jim Morgan, who has given up his cap and scarlet in order to ride to hounds. The principal bidding for the old hounds was between Earl Fitzwilliam (who had just succeeded Lord Galway as master of the Badsworth) and the Hon. Mark Rolle; but Devonshire beat Yorkshire by the highest bid. No. 10, in which the whole couple averaged 78g. a piece. The cream of "the lady pack" comprised 10, which averaged 62gs., after a most spirited contest, in which the Hon. Mark Rolle, commissioner outbidded all the very determined opponents. Heartless and Red Rose were its especial objects of desire. Of the 2 old huntsmen who were pensioned, Carrol carried all before it in lot 10.

The fifty couple of old hounds—half of which went to the Badsworth—averaged 47gs. a couple; while the nine couple and a half of unentered hounds scarcely made much over 18. Rarity, by Grove Tragedy—Duchess of puppies, was knocked down for 82gs., the same price as Wildfire, by Grove Wrangler. The unentered hounds were purchased by Earl Fitzwilliam, Mr. Osborne Hamilton, and Mr. Scratton; and we believe that the Badsworth—whose country is to be 2 days—had their number augmented by some twenty-eight couple in all. Sir David Baird, who will, it is said, fill Major Fletcher's place in the East Lothian country, brought out of the five-couple lots of old hounds, and the sixty-three couple, exclusive of nine couple of whelps, just made 26½g. a couple (more than 4½gs. a couple); while the whole 217½g. for twenty hunters and hacks, &c., composed a grand total of 1858gs. The condition in which the horses were brought out did immense credit to the head groom; and the crack Percy, by Young Prism, soon found a home at Lord Henry Bentinck's for 200gs. Bought by Sir Hercules, Mr. Scratton appeared to take the fancy of all the huntsmen most amazingly, was second to him on the price-list at 200gs; and then came Locomotive, by The Steamer, 175gs., purchased, we believe, by Lord Macclesfield, and The Queen, by Voltaire, for whom, as well as The Juggler, 150gs. each gave the last nod. Good Hunters are on as huntsman with Major Wellist, and Charles Ambler, the first whip, goes to the Badsworth. There are a great many changes among whips in England and huntsmen in Ireland. Promotions are very rare indeed there; but we have to note that Will Dorton, who goes to the Brocklesby, who is to become huntsman to the Valed White Horse. We have strange accounts from the Essex and Suffolk. After the recent hounds' meal, which ended in Mr. Nunn's case, the committee declined the use of the hounds to the late master any longer on the country, and they went back to Mr. Nunn's, on the 2nd of April, with Will Borton, the huntsman. Mr. White forthwith got a scratch pack together, and, with Mr. George Cook's assistance, drew the best of the Suffolk country blank on the 6th of April. On the 7th of April Mr. Nunn took out the old pack, and drew the Wesley covers, where Mr. White had drawn in the month on the 10th. Such is the statement we have received of this remarkable matter. It is considered but their fateful thing of the season last Wednesday week from Chitgrove; and a Kilkeney correspondent writes us that they have never had a better season, and intend to wind up on the 23rd with a grand staghound and a dinner to the master, Lord St. Lawrence.

HAMPTON COURT PALACE.—The state apartments are open to the public on every day of the week, except Friday, when they are closed for the purpose of being cleaned. The hours are from ten o'clock in the morning until six in the evening, from the 1st of April to the 1st of October, and the remainder of the year from ten until four.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ENIGMA.—It admits of a second solution in each of the variations.

S. A. HARRISON.—Your problem is very fine, but is marred by another threat; can be solved in 4 moves; 1. Q to B 7th. The other two, which are different forms of the same position, are solved by—1. B to K 8th, &c.

C. OSBORNE.—No. 1 is unsatisfactory, if Black play 3. B from B 4th to B 3rd. The others are all too easy; but there's a certain neatness of construction that gives promise of the future. Please send us your address, as we have a letter for you.

J. LAWRENCE, Debreczin.—Write, for his second move, to Peter "Csonka."

A SUNDAY ADMIRER.—The first problem received is an easy mate in two moves, beginning with—1. R to K 5th (ch). 2. B to K 5th, mate. The subsequent one has not yet been examined.

J. HOLLAND.—Your mate when only 2.—1. P to K 5th, becoming + Bishop, &c., or by—1. R to K 5th, &c.

PALAMEDES.—"The Lady's Argument" is illogical. If Black, at move 17, play R to K 6th, how will you effect mate next move? Your mate is an exemplification of a stratagem by the late H. Bolton; and the third position, however ingenious, being evolved, is not adapted for our columns.

 The answers to many communications are unavoidably deferred.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 842.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q 8th (ch)	K to Q B 3rd,	3. R to K 4th	Q takes R

2. R to Q B 8th (ch)	K to Q 3rd	5. Kt to K B 4th.	Mate.

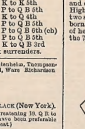
WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of the Hon. Caroline Handley, of Bookey House, Kent, and of St. Leonards-on-Sea, Sussex-square, was proved in London, on the 4th of April, by Sir William Miles, Bart., of Leigh Court, Bristol, The Hon. and Rev. Thomas Edwardes, M.A., Rector of Broughton, Westmorland, the brother, and Miss Caroline Edwardes Handley, the eldest daughter, the acting executors. The personalty, valued at £14,000, she has principally amongst her eight daughters and youngest son, the eldest son being provided for by the real estate under marriage settlement. This youngest son receives a further and distinct legacy of £3000. There is also a sum of £10,000 invested upon trust in respect of by the will of her late husband, to be divided among their younger children. There is, however, a peculiarity in the case of Miss Handley, who appears to have been born after the execution of her husband's will; it is therefore her desire that he should read the same as if he had died after her birth, as numerated under the will of her late husband. She bequeaths to her unmarried daughters all the plate, linen, china, furniture, and other effects, as well as £1000 each. To Miss Jane Handley and to S. Amory, solicitor, Tarquarton-street, and Charlotte Quelch. The deceased was born in the year 1796, and was the widow of Mr. Amory, of Culverthorpe Hall, Lincoln, who died in 1846. She was the eldest daughter of the second Lord Kenyon, Thomas Edwardes, and a descendant from Francis Edwardes, Esq., of Trefgarne, Pembrokeshire, of an ancient Welsh family.

Sir John Barker Mill, Bart., of Mottisfont Abbey, near Romsey, Hants, had executed his will and codicil previously on the 10th of September, 1881, only one week before his death, and has left personalty estimated at £50,000. Lady Mill, his relict, has the principal interest in the testamentary estate. Sir John has bequeathed to his wife, for her life, all his freehold and leasehold estates, and the income accruing thereout of under the will of Jacob, the late Sir Charles Mill, Bart. (Barker Mill's Estate Act), and after her decease he has bequeathed the freehold and leasehold estates to Mr. Peyton Dutton, the daughter of his cousin, Captain Barker. Sir John makes the following bequests to his servants:—To the steward, a legacy of £500, during his legacy duty; to his gamekeeper, Henry Powell, an annuity of £50; and a like annuity to his butler, groom of the chambers, and to all his other servants, coachmen, and gamekeepers. He appointed his wife residuary legatee. Sir John Barker Mill, who succeeded to the title of John Barker Mill, was formerly Vicar of Sambourne Kings with Stockbridge, and Sambourn Little, of which livings he became the patron.

The late Mrs. Catherine Ball, of Cheltenham, Gloucester, widow, who died on the 4th of January, has by her estates in the counties of Kent, Sussex, and Middlesex, £100; Irish Church Missions, £100; Irish Church Education, £100; Bethesda Hospital, £100; Ferney Beaders, Ireland, £100; British and Foreign Bible Society, £100; Society for Distributing and Teaching the Bible in Spain, £100; Colchester Hospital, £100; Berwick Church Missionary and Pastoral Aid, £100 each; Cheltenham Hospital, £50; Female Penitentiary, £50; Home for Little Boys, £50; Society for Sick Clerks, and other churches in connection for the poor, £50 for each. The late testatrix also bequeathed a sum sufficient to purchase the erection of a Church, Cheltenham, and £500 for the endowment thereof. To a Scripture-reader she left a freehold house, and to the widow of another Scripture-reader, £100.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.



JELINGER C. SYMONS, ESQ.

JELINGER Cockeran Symons, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, and one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, and author of "A Soldier and a Man" and compiler of considerable merit and repute, was a son of Sir Jelinger Symons, Knight, Physician, of Hatt, in the county of Cornwall (now represented by William Symons, Esq., J.P.), whose family deduces its descent from the Counts of Avranches, in Normandy, and is allied by blood to its antiquity and its alliances, to rank with the highest in the county. He was the younger brother of Thomas Symons, M.A., Rector of Boconnoc, Lostwithiel, and Vicar of Morwenstow, in the county of Hereford, J.P., by his wife, Maria Henrietta, daughter of Sir Arthur Carey, Bart., of Cockington, Devon. He was born in 1809, and was educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he graduated as B.A. in 1831. He was called to the Bar by the Middle Temple in Hilary Term, 1845, and joined the Western Circuit and the Gloucester Sessions, and obtained a very fair amount of practice. His acquirements and reputation for defending prisoners: one of the very last cases in which he acted was the well-known one of a clergyman, named Smith, who was charged with having made an indecent assault on a quondam lover of the latter. Mr. Symons defended the wife, who was acquitted. He was also in the law that Mr. Symons' talents would become conspicuous. His speeches, pamphlets, and lectures on various subjects, and especially on those which were the outcome of his own notice; and so well were his educational views and exertions appreciated that the Government appointed the barrister of Lincoln's Inn to fill the office with consumate ability. Notwithstanding the official labours, Mr. Symons continued to practise as a barrister at law, and for two years engaged against Dr. Whewell in a controversy, which created some sensation. The subject of the dispute was soon on its wane, Mr. Symons' last work also attracted public attention; it was a very able unpunctuative volume, William Burke, M.P., the eminent orator and constant friend and probable relative of the Right Hon. Edmund Burke's. Mr. Symons' relationship to the late William Burke was the subject matter of "Junius." Whether successful or not in that interest, the book certainly throws much new light on the controversy as to the authorship of "Junius," and strengthened not a little the now prevalent opinion that Edmund Burke and he himself were completely identical in the secret of the "Junius Letters." Mr. Symons married, in 1845, Angelina, daughter and coheir of Edward Swete, Esq., of Oxton House, county of Warwick. High Sheriff of Brecknockshire in 1831, and by her, who survives him, leaves issue Jelinger Edward Swete, Edward Edmund, and Edward Hildrige, born in 1848. Mr. Symons, who had been for a long time in a delicate state of health, brought on by overwork, died at his residence, Oxton House, on the 7th inst. His loss is deeply felt by his family and by the numerous friends who he has made, high and low, in the literary, progressive though quiet manners, and kind disposition had procured him.

SIR JOHN HALL, BART.

SIR John Hall, fifth Baronet, of Dunglas, was born on the 10th day of his wife, Lady Hall-Dalrymple, second daughter of Dunbar, fourth Earl of Selkirk, by Anne Hall, the Honourable Colonel, M.P. for St. Michael's, President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and author of various talented works on architecture and the sciences, and was the brother of the accomplished and popular writer, the late Captain Basil Hall, R.N. He succeeded his father as Baronet in 1876, on the 22nd of June, 1833. He married, the 23rd of July, 1861, Lady Hall-Dalrymple, daughter of Dunbar, Esq., of Dalry, N.B., by whom he leaves five children, the eldest of whom, the present Sir John Hall, Bart., succeeds to the title and estates of Dunglas, and is the heir-presumptive to the widow of another Scripture-reader, £100.

The Council General of the Hérault, of which M. Michel Chevalier is a member, has voted, on April 4, 1868, for the invention of a simple and practical method for ascertaining whether, and in what proportion, alcoholic distillers have mixed with their alcohols from other substances. The prize essays are to be sent to the Prefecture of the Hérault before July 1, 1869, and will be judged by four chemists and artizans of Montpellier, assisted by a member of the agricultural society of the department.

POST-OFFICE MONEY ORDERS.—Several changes of considerable importance are about to be introduced into money orders at home. The maximum sum for which orders may be drawn is to be extended from £5 to £10; the scale of commission is to be reduced; the payment will be omitted, by using, as the case may be, a penny or twopenny stamp (in addition, of course, to the usual charge) to direct that the order shall not be payable until ten days after date, so as to afford time for the receipt of an acknowledgment before the order is cashed.

PRINTING OF BIBLES.—We announced last week that the Committee on the so-called Bible-printing monopoly had, by the casting vote of the chairman, decided upon recommending the abolition of the Queen's printers' patent. A member of the Committee has now communicated to the public the counter-report proposed by Mr. Walpole. In this report it is stated that the authorised version of the Scriptures has obtained a degree of accuracy which has never been equalled; and it is added, with truth, that the Bible is generally printed more correctly, and at a cheaper rate than any other book in the English language, "of the same quality and size."

THE BURGOMASTER AND HIS DAUGHTER. FROM A DRAWING BY J. GILBERT.

THE PALACE OF COMPIEGNE.

COMPIEGNE: ITS PALACE, ITS HOTEL DE VILLE, AND AN IMPERIAL STAG-HUNT IN THE FOREST.

WHEN the Roman legions under Julius Cæsar entered as conquerors upon the territory of the Gaule, they halted in an immense plain surrounded by regular trees, and, stopping for a short time in their triumphal course, they erected in the immediate neighbourhood of the wild hut already existing solid buildings, a fortified tower, and circulated rampants. The unfortunate Druids, tracked even in their most secret retreats, then abandoned the Forest of Compiègne, carrying away with them the golden bill and the sacred vases employed in the celebration of the mysteries of their pagan worship. Roman civilisation thus advanced with Roman conquest, and, in order to improve the manners of the conquered populations, commenced by corrupting them. At least such is the tradition handed down by ancient writers, and we are not disposed to be sceptical before upon a name so that of Julius Cæsar, although we are inclined to think that it is frequently employed by learned archæologists as an indirect way of admitting that little is known of the origin of the places the paternity of which is thus conveniently thrust upon the ubiquitous Roman.

After many centuries of war and strife, the French Monarchy at length emerged from this sanguinary chaos; and Ide Kings, satisfied with the pleasures procured for them by their chamberlains, had ventured on the road that led from the capital to Compiègne. Charles the Bald desired to have a hunting-seat there, and, under the name of Cariopolis, the Royal pavilion was erected as if by enchantment. Soon this simple pavilion was judged insufficient, and a château was added to it: from this time Compiègne marched to the conquest of celebrity. Clotaire I. went there to die; Louis le Gudse went there to be crowned; Louis the Stutterer there also put his own crown and subsequently found a tomb; and there also Carloman called together the French seigneurs to ask their assistance against the encroachments of the Normans. To mention all the events, authenticated events, that have taken place from such early periods as those in which the circumstances just cited occurred would occupy too much space for the limits of our Journal; we will therefore leave there re.note souvenirs to the research of such of our readers as like to dive into the history of the early centuries of the Christian era. Let us state in passing, however, that Compiègne, from the time of its first establishment as a hunting-seat, has been the favourite resort of French Monarchs fond of the chase, and that nearly all the rulers of France, from the Carlovingian and Merovingian Kings down to the present Emperor, have sought distraction and renovated health in the excitement produced by the fatiguing pleasure of hunting the stag or the wild boar in its noble primitive forest.

We pass on, then, to comparatively modern times—to the beginning of the fifteenth century, a period at which, owing to the unhappy apathy of Charles VI., a large part of France was held by the English. In consequence, the ancient Gallic kingdom was threatened with total ruin; when suddenly a young girl presented herself at the Royal Court, and declared that she was sent by the Almighty to deliver her native country from its oppressors. Every one is more or less familiar with the history, or at least the story, of Joan of Arc, the Maid of Orleans; and we have heard how frequently the French soldiers, animated by her seemingly-inspired presence, were led on to victory by this courageous maiden. At length it was thought that the enemy was vanquished, and Joan entered in return to the obscurity of her former peaceful occupation. But the English had not been entirely driven away—her courageous example was still needed; so the prayers of the army, and even of the King himself, prevailed upon Joan to remain. Compiègne had been snatched from the troops under the command of the Duke of Bedford; but the latter, after a subsequent victory at Pont l'Evesque, determined to recover the place. The Maid of Orleans, on being apprised of the Duke's intention, hastened to Compiègne and placed herself at the head of its defenders. On the 25th of May, 1430, she made a sortie, at the head of a hundred combatants, by the Porte du Pont, in order to surprise a party of the besiegers. However, the English, encamped at a short distance, informed of the attack, hastened to the succour of Baudon de Noyelle, and compelled the besieged to retire. Joan, as we have seen, was the foremost in attack and the last in retreat, remained in the extreme rear while her troops were re-entering the town; but the passage being somewhat narrow, and the Burgundians making a charge, ensued a terrible confusion, in the midst of which an archer of Picardy seized the Maid by her haibert, and caused her to fall from her horse, so that she was easily taken prisoner. Thus it was that, without what appears to us an unfounded suspicion of treachery, the victim of the unfortunate events of that epoch fell into the hands of her enemies. Fortunately for the historical recollections of Compiègne it was not there that she paid the forfeit of her youthful life. Too greedy archer sold his prisoner to Jean de Luxembourg, who again bartered her away to the English, by whom, as every schoolboy knows, the enthusiastic patriot was afterwards burnt in the market-place in front of the Cathedral of Rouen.

Towards the beginning of the seventeenth century Compiègne became the seat of what we now consider refined pleasure and recreation. In 1698 Louis XIV. assembled there a camp of sixty thousand men. On this occasion a series of the most exquisite fêtes were offered to Madame de Maintenon out of gallantry by the Grand Monarque, and they were conducted with a luxury and liberality unknown even in our days, and rendered still more remarkable by the comparative scarcity of wealth at that time. Louis XV. rarely passed a year without going to Compiègne, where his urbanity and the freedom of his amiable manners attracted a great number of visitors, and laid the foundation of that general affability of manner which characterises the inhabitants of this favoured town, to whose remains the magnificence of the Court powerfully contributed.

We reserve our other notes relating to the subsequent history of this interesting spot for the remaining portions of our article, in looking by which we shall find a fitting place when speaking of the subjects of our illustrations. Before proceeding to do so, however, it may be well to mention that Compiègne, which was comprised in the ancient province of Picardy, is situated at the distance of forty-five miles from Paris, on the left bank of the River Oise. It is one of the stations of the Northern Railway. The population of the town is nearly 10,000, and it contains a number of medieval monuments of great interest, especially churches. It possesses, moreover, several manufactories of tiles, bricks, earthenware, &c., and has a flourishing trade in flax, corn, and articles of general consumption. The inhabitants have ever been mindful of the motto given to the town by Philippe-le-Bel in 1218, "Regi et Regno fidelissima"—faithful to king and country; and in the municipal archives are preserved numerous letters of thanks, accompanying immunities, from different Sovereigns for their zeal and fidelity.

THE PALACE OF COMPIEGNE.

The Palace of Compiègne is situated between the town and the forest of that name. The substitution of this Doric pile for the hunting-seat previously existing on its site was due to the munificence of Louis XV., who, in 1755, charged the celebrated architect Gabriel with its construction: it was finally completed by Louis XVI., and restored by Napoleon I. The superintendence and arrangement of the interior decorations were confided to the famous Le Notre. The exterior is elegant, but simple in decoration. The château is built on three sides of a square, and the two wings of the principal façade look out upon a vast court in one and by a beautiful arcade, in the centre of which is the gateway leading to the grand courtyard. The apartments are splendid, and furnished with an unsurpassable luxury. Gobelin tapestries, painted walls, decorated alcoves, sumptuous furniture meet the eye at each instant. But, notwithstanding all this profusion, Louis XV. did not deem it worthy of the favourite of his Court, Madame Du Barry, for whom the situation was unbounded; and the King one day exclaimed to his architect, while inspecting the progress of the buildings: "What a dismal, mean, gilding for Madame Dubarry! Why cannot I present her with a palace worthy of her, a palace of diamonds!" Such was the expression of regret in which the Royal gallantry, dissatisfied with an offering that an ordinary mortal would have thought superb, found vent.

It was at the Palace of Compiègne that Napoleon I. received the Archduchess Marie Louise. The grand gallery, erected by the Emperor, is about 100 feet in length, 40 feet in breadth, and 50 feet in height. The vaulted roof is supported on each side by twenty fluted marble columns, richly gilt. The ceiling is divided into twelve compartments, beautifully painted in allegorical figures representing Napoleon's victories. The gallery is lighted by forty magnificent lamps, and there are some fine paintings in the numerous apartments and on the staircase.

The gardens of the palace are most agreeably laid out, and ornamented with statues; an arbour of iron framework, 450 feet in length and 15 feet broad, leads from the château to the forest, forming a delightful walk.

Twenty-four miles from Paris than its rival Fontainebleau, the present Emperor, who has considerably improved the palace and grounds, seems to have a peculiar partiality for Compiègne, where during the autumn his Majesty usually gives a series of splendid fêtes, to which are invited the most distinguished personages, whether of rank or fame, from foreign countries: Diplomacy, Law, Science, Military and Naval, Literature, Art, Wit, and Beauty, are represented by turns at these Imperial Home Parties—Home Parties, which will have added not the least brilliant souvenir to the long list already attached to the ancient residence of King or Emperor at Compiègne.

THE HOTEL DE VILLE.

During the reign of Louis XII. Compiègne was endowed with several buildings, among them was the Hôtel de Ville, an edifice in a very good style, but which has been long in ruins, and was presently so. Formerly the lawyers held their meetings in the belfry of this old monument. But in 1309 Jean Lourrel left to his native town by will a house situated on the Corn Market, opposite the belfry; this house was demolished in 1504, and upon its site was raised the present Hôtel de Ville (shown in our illustration), which was finished in 1506, during the reign of Charles VI. Its style and ornaments are indicative of the laws of the Renaissance. Its façade is pierced with door and windows pretty regularly, and is decorated with niches surmounted by spiral ornaments; it is preceded by a perron-staircase, also balustraded, from behind which emerge two large stone windows in the stone work frames, and the whole is surmounted by a slate roof, on which the whole edifice terminating in a sharp roof. The octagonal tower, of which the angles are softened by small turrets, dominates the façade, and is surmounted by a pointed roof finishing with a thin spire.

There was formerly an equestrian statue of Louis XIII., to whom the Hôtel de Ville was indebted for many of its embellishments, in the recess near the centre of the façade, and by the sides of it several medallions representing the arms of the King and of the city of Compiègne. These medallions disappeared, and the Royal statue has been replaced by a dial surrounded with palm leaves, at the bottom of which is inscribed the motto mentioned above: Regi et regno fidelissima. The building has been recently restored and endowed with a museum by the liberality of the city architect. On the side of the Hôtel de Ville was formerly situated the Arsenal, of which the gateway still exists, between the Café and Hôtel de la Cloche, both shown in our Engraving. This gateway is ornamented with four stone cannons, forming double columns, surmounted with balls, wheels, and other parts of a piece of ordnance. The Arsenal having become useless has been converted into a house of detention.

AN IMPERIAL STAG-HUNT IN THE FOREST.

Hunting in the forest of Compiègne in former times was a more serious matter than at present. The wild boar was then a denizen of the wood, and the favourite object of the pursuit of hardy hunters, armed with stout javelins, with which the chase was generally terminated on foot. An infuriated boar was not an adversary easily subdued, but the excitement of the danger was looked upon as a compensation for the peril incurred. Nowadays a boar-hunt is of rare occurrence in France; and although the pleasure of the chase is still great, it is attended with less danger to the huntsman, and often with more alarity to the victim, to which position has been promoted the fleet and graceful stag, sole majesty the boar, almost extinct.

During the month of November last, among the amusements provided for the distraction of the guests of the Emperor Napoleon, there were several Imperial stag-hunts in the forest of Compiègne; and as we were favoured with information by one of those gentlemen on a trip with our artist, M. Beaucé, to the old Picardian town, where we have spent a most pleasant time for the last few days, waiting the first favourable occasion to make our sketch, the subject of which appears in the present Number. This occasion was long in arriving; and, from the preparations always required to be made when a stag with ten antlers is to be hunted (one with fewer is not considered worthy of the Imperial pursuit), the whole town was informed of the event the day before. A proclamation was given at a cross road called the Huits du Roi; so, after a substantial déjeuner before starting, we went to assist at the meet, which was fixed for half-past twelve. On arriving at this spot a charming scene presented itself—a troop of huntsmen in the costume of the period of Louis XIV. were passing at the time in sounded conversation while waiting for the moment to mount; there were long lines of proud, pawing horses, under the care of grooms in livery; and the noble hounds, held in by the keepers dressed in their picturesque costumes, seemed eager to follow their destined prey. At length the signal was given that their Imperial Majesties were approaching; the horn was sounded, and in an instant every cavalier was in his saddle. In a few moments a splendid deer was started, and off went the brilliant cavalcade, headed by the Emperor and Empress, who were immediately followed by the Grand Veneur, Marshal Magnan, and the noble and distinguished crowd of their invités. This was the moment chosen by our artist for his illustration. At the details of which we have given, we will now mention what characterises the productions of his pencil. We followed the chase in a carriage; and, as we had engaged a huntsman who was acquainted with every turn in the forest, we were enabled, by taking numerous short cuts, to come up with the hunt at different parts of the pursuit. After a sharp run of about an hour the stag was killed near the river, their Majesties being in at the death. It is the custom for the Empress, when the stag is killed by the Emperor, to make a signal, upon which a huntsman advances and gives the coup-de-grâce to the panting victim. It took place the evening we returned from the chase, and the curée aux flambeaux, as it is called, when the hungry dogs are let loose upon the body of the dead stag, in the garden in front of the palace, in the presence of the whole Court.

The Forest of Compiègne is admirably suited for hunting purposes. It contains more than 30,000 acres, including plains, or carrefours; 354 roads from eight to nine miles long and twenty-two yards wide, 187 stone bridges, and 1,200 miles of sylvestrian rides. The circumference of the forest is at present upwards of fifty-seven miles.

THE BURGOMASTER AND HIS DAUGHTER.

BY J. GILBERT.

THE burgomaster of the middle ages was a man of the highest political and social importance. He was not only the chief magistrate, the chairman of chief magistrate, military commandant, and prince merchant, he was surrounded by a little court in which the most noteworthy men of the city, in art and station, in letters and arts, took part. As protectors and encouragers of the liberal arts they were the companions and ideas of romance, poetry, and painting are associated with their names, which congenial art easily associates in pictorial representation. In the Burgomaster and his Daughter," a recent drawing by Mr. Gilbert, which has not yet met the public eye, the artist shows himself thoroughly imbued with that romance, and gives a representation of the great civic chief and his sumptuous establishment with a breadth of treatment and a richness of tone in which we recognise something of a Rembrandtish inspiration. There he stands, with his broad beaver, his flowing locks, and pointed beard, resting on his cane, as returned from the citadel or the council chamber. His daughter—a rair-haired damsel of mild expression—has been paying some visit to the mansion. On the table are fruits and a cup of wine in a quaint old goblet. The whole group perfectly realises all preconceived notions of the burgomaster and his family during the "good old times," when every city was a little republic to balance the oppressive authority of the nobles.

THE WINES OF FRANCE.

No. II.—BORDEAUX.

In the days of Queen Anne, ere Mr. Methuen made that unfortunate treaty with Portugal which wounded the English of the upper and middle classes from their ancient love of the light, unintoxicating but generous wines of France, and drove them for substitutes to the doctored and adulterated vintages of Spain and Portugal, their fashionable drinks were burgundy and claret.

Drink, and never spare it:
Its a bottle of good claret was the burden of song, and the practice of the table.

The fact was made sufficiently evident by the quotations in our lists from the literature of the time, and might be rendered still more palpable, if need were, by many hundreds of like quotations drawn from poets, novelists, and essayists. But, if burgundy were a favourite with the lone wineskin, claret was held in still greater repute, doubtless for the sufficient reason that such solid and assiduous drinkers as our forefathers, that the bead suffered less from three or four bottles of bordeaux than from one or two of burgundy. But claret, or "claurit," was the name only of one of the thousand wines of the fruitful districts of Médoc. It is not easy to trace the period when it first became the English name for all the red Bordeaux wines, but it is clear that it was very early in the intercourse between the countries. The untravelled Englishman of the present day—the man of port and sherry, gin and beer—knows but of one claret, like his fathers before him, and is ignorant of the fact that claret and bordeaux are to some extent convertible terms in this country, though not in France; and that Bordeaux and Médoc produce white wines which not even an Englishman would call claret. Bordeaux is the capital of the district producing the wine, as Dijon is that of the sunny region which bestows on the world the rich gift of burgundy. The people of Bordeaux, as well as those of Paris and all of France, Burgundy excepted, speak of the wines of the Gironde, but not Rhone as burgundy, or hardy, for ordinary drink. And it has been remarked by physicians that, wherever burgundy of the stronger kinds is the common beverage, there is more or less of gout to be found among the people, but that there is almost an unknown disease among the drinkers of bordeaux wines. In Paris, where Bordeaux wines are more generally consumed than their more potent rivals of the Saône and Rhone, gout, if known at all, would be looked upon as a peculiarly English disease, and one not to be feared by those who drink bordeaux. And it should be understood that bordeaux is not an article of luxury in France, but a common diet, an article as necessary to health as water itself, and almost as cheap, so to a Frenchman who contents himself with ordinaire as porter or stout is to an Englishman. The red wines of Bordeaux may be classified as here:—

Bordeaux ordinaires.	Saint Estephe.	Pichon Longueville. Rouse Mouton.
Saint Emilion.	Margaux.	Larose. Larose Perganson. Château Margaux.
Médoc.	Bordeaux Supérieurs.	Cos Destournel. Château Lafitte.
Saint Julien.	Leoville.	Ducru Beaucaillou. Pontet Chanet.
	Lascombes.	Rauzan. Gassies. Brane Mouton.

The ordinary red wines of Bordeaux are in most seasons excessively plentiful. Not being exported to any extent, and being in little repute in foreign countries, the growers of the vineyards are enabled to drink them both at breakfast and at dinner. The English song which says—

Would you rob a poor man of his beer?

would have to be rendered into French if it were to be made intelligible—

for it is the poor who drink wine, and consider it a necessary of existence—just as much as an English washerwoman does her tea. And this wine, sour and thin as it appears to unaccustomed palates, is full of nutritive virtue, and only requires closer acquaintanceship with its novel flavour to be as thoroughly relished here as it is in the country of its birth, at its mid-day meal, and doubtless will be delivered at the Custom House on the Thames at the rate of five pence a bottle, exclusive of duty, as soon as Mr. Gladstone's Budget comes into operation. Of this class of wine the quantities with which Bordeaux and its neighborhood can supply the people of this country are almost illimitable;—not a doctored wine, nor a wine compounded of aloe leaves and logwood, or any vile chemical and alcoholic stuff, but the pure juice of the grape, as also the choicer and more expensive wines of the Château Margaux, the Château Lafitte, the Château Latour, and the Château Larose that the fraudulent wine-doctor will not grower—by their names trade. The common clarets are so cheap that it does not pay to adulterate them, so that he who calls for "ordinaire" and pays the ordinaire price, either at home or abroad, has little cause to apprehension of adulteration. It is otherwise with respect to the choice and celebrated vintages. The area and product of the great vignobles are so small, and their renown so great, that dishonest traders resort to the aid of chemistry to imitate their flavour and aroma, and palm off upon Frenchmen as well as upon foreigners the commonest wines (good in themselves if not tampered with) as the prime cru premier growth. It is not to be supposed, but he drinks genuine château margaux or château lafitte at a Parisian restaurant, a Greenwich tavern, a London club, or at the sumptuous table of any patrician or rich commercial man, drinks but too commonly an imitation fabricated in the cellars of Bordeaux—a wine worth perhaps two or three shillings a bottle, but sold to the consumer at eight or nine. In a recent pleasure trip to the beautiful city of Bordeaux and the fairest city in France—the writer of these lines and some friends took a drive through the famous districts of Médoc that produces the commonest as well as the finest wines. It was in the month of September, and the grapes had fully ripened, and the road lay through a succession of vineyards, or rather of vinefields, for they were quite unenclosed. The vine plants stood of the average height of the hop, and of corresponding stalks of England. At short intervals the grapes and vine leaves were dabbed with a light green mixture, apparently sprinkled, with a garden syringe. This having excited our curiosity as to the meaning and purpose, we were informed by our driver that it was a nauseous, but not deleterious, mixture sprinkled on in this manner all through the vignobles, and especially at the roadsides, as some little security against the pilfering of idlers. Some of the finest of grapes as the fox in Æsop's fable, but we got to become disgusted with them if they rose not a mouthful of fruit with the juice of a lime. The high road from Bordeaux to Pauillac are situated almost all the most famous vignobles—the Château St. Julien, the Château Lafitte, the Château Latour, and the Château Margaux. Our party stopped at the latter—perhaps the most noted of them all for the excellence of its wine, and the care bestowed upon its manufacture. The château belongs to M. Aguado, Marquis de la Marismas, the son of the celebrated banker and financier of the same name, by whose steward, in the absence of the family, we were received with the hospitality accorded to strangers in all such show-places, escorted over the house, the cellars, and the vineyards, and initiated into some of the mysteries of vine-culture, the vino-press, and the manufacture of the most luxurious and costly clarets. No tricks are played at Château Margaux or Château Lafitte, or at any of the high-class vignobles. The interests at stake are too important to be risked, even if commercial probity and honour were disregarded. At the château we learned the fact—which it may not be uninteresting to record—that the wine of the Château Margaux is never sold in the market. We were shown the books, from which it was quite clear that the ordinary customer and the wine-merchant have seldom a chance of obtaining any quantity of it. The King of Prussia was inscribed for the whole vintage of one year, with the exception of a few dozens reserved for the use of the château itself, and for that of a little wayside auberge closely adjoining. The Emperor of Russia, the Pope, and other crowned heads have been inscribed for the whole vintage of successive years in like manner. And the house of Rothschild followed the Royal and Imperial example, and took its share of obtaining years in advance the wine so highly prized. The "merchants of Bordeaux" were also inscribed in the book as customers for a year's wine; but at the period of our visit the turn to be served would not arrive for some years, when, and when only, the general customer would have a chance of procuring the genuine article. The Kings and Potentates of Europe buy this wine because their cooks are accustomed to it, but to give away in presents to successful Generals, Ministers, or Diplomatists, together, perhaps, with a jewelled snuff-box, or a cross and star of some order of chivalry. When any of these personages die, and their effects are sold off by their executors, the genuine, rich, and real château margaux comes into the possession of amateurs or the public. But it is only at such times that there is any chance—except at long intervals—for any of the wine ever getting into the cellars or the chasers of the vintage—for outsiders, however wealthy. The château margaux of course ees is but too often mere margaux—a very good wine much of it, but not the genuine article, which is not more than a third of the price of the genuine article. At the little auberge where our party lunched we had some real wine of the château, at three shillings a bottle. The wine that it could be conveyed for to English markets in any quantities, could not well be retailed, even under Mr. Gladstone's tariff, for less than nine or ten shillings a bottle.

The whites wines of Bordeaux, ranging in price in the city of Bordeaux itself from one franc to fifteen francs a bottle, are:—

Graves.	Barsac.	Lur Saluces.	Château d'Yquem.

(Sometimes called Barsac. Occasionally sparkling).

It is not likely that many of these will be largely imported into this country, though grave and barsac are wines that deserve to be known to the uttermost ends of the earth, and that might be delivered in London, all duty paid, at from one shilling to one and a franc a bottle. The château yquem, a delicious wine, is worth fifteen francs a bottle in Bordeaux; and, when any English bonvivant, drinking at a restaurant, is charged by our agents, as in the list of mine host, or of his club, at seven or eight shillings a bottle, he may be tolerably certain that it is sauterne only, and not yquem. Sauterne is a delicious wine, but the gourmet ought to be able to procure it at less than four shillings a bottle.

Our space is much too limited to permit us to do anything like justice to or vas a subject as the wines of France. At some future period we may, perhaps, have something to say upon the other growths of variety—the wines of champagne—but at present we must content ourselves with this brief summary of those of the merits of burgundy and bordeaux. Both are wines that require to be studied in various sorts, may be expected to be largely introduced into Great Britain. Should they ever become, as it is to be hoped they will, articles of as much necessity as tea or coffee—articles of ordinary diet, and not of luxury—the ill feeling, at present cherished by our wine-trade and the defunct, system of purposely-restricted trade with our nearest neighbour will be rapidly removed; and war between Great Britain and France will become a barbarous anachronism as far as between England and Scotland. It is a proud thing for Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Cobden to have linked their names to such a beneficent revolution; and hereafter the treaty between France and Great Britain, and the abandonment by Napoleon III. of the old prohibitive system—under the effects of which France was so rapidly becoming a nation of mere wine-growers, and England was losing the spirit for foreign trade, and for commerce itself, understood in the widest sense of the word—will perhaps be found to resound more to his personal fame and to the stability of his dynasty than Magenta and Solferino, and fifty other such brilliant but unsatisfactory victories.

THE FALLS OF TERNI.

The roar of waters!—from the hending height
Velino chides the hoarse invader, dash'd
By the full force of waters rapid as the light
The flashing waves laugh on the enamour'd abyss;
The hell of waters! where they howl and hiss,
And boil in endless torture; while the spray
Of the fir great agony, wrung out from this
Their Phlegethon, curls round the rocks in gray volumes of jet
That grin the gulf around, in pitiless horror set.

And mounts in columns, though each clings the spirit
Returns in an unceasing shower, which rushes,
With its numerous bows, round and round,
Is as eternal Agrit to the ground,
Making it still more wild and verdant:
The gulf and how the giant element
From out its rocky bed leaps in the foam,
Crushing the cliffs, which, downward worn and rent
With his fierce footsteps, yield, channels a fearful vent

To the broad column which rolls on, and shows
More like the fountain of an infant sea
Torn from the womb of mountains, as they rose
Before the Strength of Clouds had gathered there
Unto their monstrous height, the peak yawning
With many windings, through the vale:—Look back!
Lo! where it comes like an eternity
As if to sweep down all things in its track,
Charming the eye with dread,—a matchless cataract,

Horribly beautiful! but on the verge,
From side to side, beneath the glittering morn,
An Iris sits, amidst the infernal surge,
Like Hope upon a death-bed, and, unworn
Its sturdy dyes, while all around is torn
By the distracted waters, bears unstirr'd
Its brilliant hues with all their tenses unbroken:
Resembling, 'mid the torture of the hour,
Love watching Madness with unalterable mien.—Childe Harold.

The famous Cascata della Marmore, generally known as the Falls of Terni from being in the province of Umbria, a town in Central Italy, is formed by the Velino, which falls into the Nera at this point by a canal cut out of the rock. This cascade is one of the most beautiful in Europe, and its appearance is picturesque and astonishing, especially when viewed from beneath at the time the noonday sun illumines the falling waters. It is not composed of a single fall of water, but of three successive falls. The first is three hundred feet in height; and the water falls on the rock with so much impetuosity that a greater part, being reduced to vapour, ascends to the top of the cascade. The remainder forms a second fall, and afterwards a third; and then uniting with the Nera, these waters roll in foaming billows into this deep valley. The water of the Velino is thick, and during its leaves a sediment, not only on the rocks but even in the bed of the Nera.

The following details relating to these falls are from Murray's "Handbook to Central Italy":—

The great inducement to visit is derived from the Cadute delle Marmore, so celebrated as the "Falls of Terni." They are distant about five miles from the town. The road, which is that from Terni to Rieti, for nearly three miles ascends the valley of the Nera as far as Papigno, a small village, where one leading to the bottom of the Falls branches off to the left, and descends the hill, and about half a mile from the summit reaches the spot where the Velino dashes over the precipice. There are, therefore, two points of view—that from above and that from below—seen from the opposite side of the valley. The latter, or the lower view, is by far the best: but visitors should not omit the upper, and accordingly should give directions of the guides, and go to the upper one first. The bed of the river above the Falls is about fifty feet wide, and the rapidity of the stream is said to be seven miles an hour. After seeing the Falls from the summit, the point of view is that afforded by a small building on a projecting mass of rock, some hundreds of feet below the bottom, and which was erected by Pius VI. for the accommodation of Napoleon. The lower part of the Falls is not visible from this point, but the scene, notwithstanding, is full of grandeur. A path leads from the building down the valley to a point where the Nar is crossed by a bridge, from which another on the opposite bank will lead the traveller through groves of ilex to the point where he finds himself immediately opposite the cataract. Nothing can surpass the view from this side of the valley, particularly from the little promontories on the side of the hill, which overhang the whole height of the cascade in all its magnificence. These travellers who have only time to visit the Falls should bear in mind that this is much the finest. There is another from the summit of this hill which looks down upon the Falls and the surrounding country—it reaches the plain of Velino as far as the mountains behind the Pié di Luco.

The formation of this cascade was the work of the Romans. The valley of the Velino was subject to frequent inundations from the river, which was so charged with calcareous matter that it filled its bed with deposits, and thus raised the plains of Rieti and contained inundations from the lakes which it traversed at that part of its course. To prevent the frequent waters proceeding from the occasional overflow of these lakes and of the river was first attempted by Curius Dentatus, the conquerer of the Sabines (in the year of Rome 451 = B.C. 271), who effected a channel to be cut for the Velinus, through which the waters of that river were carried into the Nera over a precipice of nearly a hundred feet. Strabo relates that Cicero and from Tacitus that the draining of the Velinus and Nera with unfrequent gave rise to disputes between the inhabitants of Reate and Interamna.

In these disputes, which happened in the year of Rome 709, Cicero was consulted by the inhabitants of Reate, who evidently looked to him for his services on the occasion. For nearly fifteen centuries upon its first construction, the Romans maintained continually the valley of its superabundant waters; but in 1400 it was so much obstructed that the waters of the Velino opened a new course, and followed by inundations in the lower valley and in the plain of Terni. Braccio da Montone, the lord of Perugia, interposed, and had a new channel cut, but it was soon choked up full. From that time to the end of the sixteenth century the inundations either above or below the Falls gave rise to disputes between the two cities; and the celebrated architects Sangallo and Fontana were employed upon the works, but with little success. Fontana proposed to the Roman emissary until he reached the obtuse angle which it made towards the precipice; he then continued the canal in a straight line, so that the waters entered the Nar at right angles. This method, added to the contracted state of the Nar at the point of junction, blocked up with the accumulation of calcareous matter by the frequent inundations were the consequence in the valley below. This was not remedied until 1785, when Pope Pius VI. found necessary to adopt measures to protect the landowners of Terni, and a new channel was accordingly cut, by which the Velino is brought into the Nar at an oblique angle, which, as stated, had the mischief originally done, and secured the effectual drainage of the plain of Rieti.

According to Sir John Herschel's calculation the Falls is 372 metres, or 1230 English feet; Ricardi, an architect of Terni, who is more likely, as a resident engineer, to have given accurate results in his measurements, estimates the upper Fall at fifty feet; the second, or the portata, Dicular Fall, from 500 to 600; and the long sheet of foam which forms the third Fall, extending from the base of the second to the Nar, at 240 feet, making a total height of between 800 and 900 feet.

The road by which the traveller descends to the bottom on his return to Terni is carried along the beautiful valley of the united rivers through groves of ilex and pine trees through the grounds of the Villa Graziani, one of the residences of Queen Caroline when Princess of Wales. The scenery of this valley is exceedingly beautiful. The mountain sides are covered with the finest timber, among which the chestnut, and the olive are conspicuous, while the lower slopes are rich in mulberry plantations and vineyards.

THE WEST INDIAN LADIES.—Nothing about them is more astonishing than the variety of their costume. It is impossible to copy it on considerable taste and great power of adaptation. In England, among our fashionables, the most extravagant fancies, false hair, false teeth, and flowing sleeves have become common; but they do not wear their finery as though they were at home in it. They wear it clumsily with their shoes on their Sunday best, something of the hog in armour. With the negro woman there is without a doubt a fine lady. She is by nature a thorough lady. In she has very frequently a good figure; and having it, she knows how to make the best of it. She is not self-conscious, is free, and will be seen to. A bodice fitted to her as though it had been made and laced in Paris. Their costumes on fête days are of the most gorgeous marvellous. Nothing by no means contented with coloured calico, but shine in muslin and lightest as are leaves on a lovely tree. They wear all their jewellery and ornaments on fête palaces. One may see of a Sunday evening three ladies occupying a white street by the breadth of the pavement, each having a boy servant attending her pins and carrying weights about the town on their bosses. And they will walk in full dress, and with their trains, a long way into town to go to church from their youth up. They rejoice most in white—in white muslin with coloured sashes; in pink bodice, pink gloves, pink bonnet, and double-breasted straw hats with deep veils and glittering bugles. The hat and the veil, however, are worn on the back of the head. A woman looks ridiculous in effect she would wear no headdress but the coloured handkerchief which is worn by girls of national costume. Some of their effects in dress and in costume are inoffensive indolence. One Sunday evening, far away in the country, I met a lady walking in gentleness, the proprietor of a small estate. She was dressed in a rich silk, with a large crinoline; for behind me, on turning round, as I saw a young girl walking home from church. She ran screaming and hood to fetch her down. The lady, on seeing me, ran off and pursued was up. Her hat also was white, and so was the lace, and so were the gloves, and so was the veil. She was a gentlewoman, the proprietor of a small estate, and a resident. Probably she is a higher grandeur for behind her walked an attendant negro, carrying the beauty of her dress behind her head.—Sir Anthony Trollope.

STRANGE SCENE AT ONE OF THE GREAT TANKS OF CEYLON.—In a lonely spot, towards the very centre of the tank, we came upon a pelicanry upon an extensive island of rock and earth. The island was about 200 yards broad, and about half a mile long, was surrounded by a line of tall forest trees, whose branches overhung the water. The sad day of October when we pierced our some white objects seated in large numbers on the tops of the trees, and as we approached nearer discovered that the objects of pelicans had formed their settlement and breeding-place in this sanctuary retreat. They sat there in hundreds, and the ground underneath was white like those of the swan, constructed of large sticks, formed great platforms sustained by the branches of the trees. In such nest there were pelicans, rather larger than those of a goose, and the male bird stood patriotically beside the female on the edge of the nest. The young birds were the ugliest of the pelicans prodigious numbers of other large water-birds had selected this for their breeding-place, and there were to be seen in themselves of the tank the spoonbill, the ibis, flamingoes, herons, egrets, storks, ibises, and other waterfowl, whose names I do not remember. The air was filled with the noise of their voices, and the screaming themselves to the fishing-fields. By degrees, as the light increased, we were able to distinguish more clearly what was going on. We looked around them on every side, stretched the neck and legs, extended their broad wings, gradually rose in groups, and slowly soared away in the direction of the seashore. The pelicans were apparently later in their movements; they allowed us to approach so near them as the swampy nature of the soil would permit, and, even when a gun was discharged amongst them, these only moved off which the particles of shot disturbed. They were in much numbers as the others, and when the water over which they had taken up their residence was swarming with crocodiles, attracted by the noise and the smell of the meat, and the native refused, from fear of them, to wade in for one of the larger pelicans which had fallen, struck by a rifle ball. It was altogether a remarkable sight.—Sir J. E. Tennent's Ceylon.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND AND THE DISCOUNT HOUSES.

BETWEEN the 4th and the 11th of the current month the reserve of notes in the banking department of the Bank of England was reduced from £7,000,000 to £5,000,000, and the directors raised the rate of discount. This circumstance excited both astonishment and uneasiness in the monetary circles of the City, and Alderman Salomons deemed it of sufficient importance to require an explanation from the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It appeared from Mr. Gladstone's reply that all the withdrawn notes were of the value of £1000, representing deposits exclusively belonging to the well-known firm of Messrs. Overend, Gurney, and Co.; but he very properly declined offering any opinion on the motives that might have influenced those eminent brokers. But, though Mr. Gladstone guarded himself with admirable discretion against awarding either praise or blame, he used language which may induce many to suspect that he was not entirely favourable to the existing system. "The proceedings of Messrs. Overend and Gurney in this matter," said the Chancellor, "had been taken not so much in connection with any private transactions as in the exercise of a power which every mercantile house might think itself entitled to put in operation, in order to exhibit, in whatever way it might think fit, the effect of the present state of the law, so as to bring into view what might be considered a public evil for the purpose of producing and promoting a disposition to apply a remedy." He then refered to the refusal of the Bank to rediscount, of which the brokers loudly complain, a subject deserving "deliberate investigation, but not justly coming within the range of individual selfish mercantile action, though cutting deeply into the whole question of the policy of the present law." He was indisposed to pursue the subject farther, thinking that "nothing should be said that would tend in any way to prejudge that question." We commend Mr. Gladstone's caution; but, as we are not under any official restraint, it falls within the legitimate sphere of our duty to enter fully into the merits of this controversy, and we shall endeavour to hold the balance with an impartial hand between the Bank and the brokers.

Excessive variations in the rate of discount were unknown prior to the complement Act of 1844. From the report of the Lords' Committee of 1848 it appears that the earlier practice of the Bank of England had been to discount at a rate nearly fixed and uniform. From the year 1704 to the 16th of May, 1839, this rate never exceeded 5 nor was less than 4 per cent. In the pressure of 1839 the rate was raised for some months to 6 per cent, but was reduced to 5 per cent in January, 1840, and remained at 4 or 5 per cent, as before, till after the passing of the 7th and 8th Vict., cap. 32, called the Bank Charter Act, and forming the complement to the monetary law of 1819, both measures originating in the legislation of the late Sir Robert Peel The ancient uniform system was abandoned in September, 1844, since which date the Bank has varied the rate of discount from 2 to 10 per cent. It is important here to observe that between 1704 and 1839 the market rate was quite independent of the Bank rate. Mr. Horsley Palmer stated in evidence that on several occasions the former was as low as 2½ per cent, while the latter never declined below 4 per cent. In the one case the Bank was kept out of the discount market; in the other it obtained almost the exclusive command. The effect was constant steadiness. Whilst this rule of action regulated the proceedings of the Bank, the directors were intrusted with large discretionary power, and exercised their own judgment in accommodating their customers, but the Act of 1844 deprived them of all discretionary power. They were commanded henceforward to observe a strictly prescribed relation between their bullion and their notes, because, as the late Lord Ashburton remarked, "machinery was substituted for human intelligence." It is from this point of view that the controversy between the Bank and the brokers must be investigated and its merits determined.

The Bank is permitted to issue fourteen millions sterling in notes, represented by what are termed Government Securities, which really mean a debt due by the Government to the Bank, but do not imply the tangible and available possession of a single grain of metallic assets. In addition the Bank may issue as many more notes as the gold in their vaults will cover. Assuming, then, that their entire circulation was twenty-one millions of notes, of these fourteen millions would rest on Government securities and seven millions on gold; but the whole twenty-one millions bear on their face the significant words "I promise to pay," though it is plain, according to the proportions just stated, that the real metallic power of the Bank amounts to no more than 6s. 8d. in the pound. The Legislature, however, in its wisdom, has deemed these relations between the promise to pay and the means for its redemption adequate, sound, and secure, and the Bank is held responsible for such redemption at all times and under all circumstances. It must, then, be admitted that the position of the Bank is one of great delicacy, and, if the brokers complain that accommodation is withheld from them, it must be remembered that the first duty of the Bank is to obey the law in virtue of which it exists as a public institution. Lord Overstone, the great patron of the Bank Charter Act, justifies the most extreme measures of self-defence by the directors in these words:—"Against the actual exhaustion of its treasure by a drain through the foreign exchanges, the Bank, under almost any circumstances, has the power of protecting herself, but to do this she must produce on the money market a pressure ruinous from its suddenness and severity; she must save herself by the destruction of all around her." This was written twenty years ago; but, when referring to the panic of 1857, Lord Overstone expressed his regret in the House of Lords that the Treasury letter, which qualified the panic had been published before the Act of 1844 had produced its legitimate effect in annihilating all the London joint-stock banks, and the witness framer showed himself consistent by declining to give a fact which the brokers ought to remember before they reproach the Bank with want of liberality. That institution is compelled by law to be just to itself before it is generous to the public. No matter who suffers, it must protect its bullion to ensure the convertibility of its notes, and this obligation accounts for the excessive oscillations in the rate of discount since the Act of 1844 was passed.

The ordinary class of traders who have not mastered the mysteries of the existing law which has divided the Bank into two departments are apt to do the directors injustice by overestimating their power. Suppose that the circulation of notes is twenty millions, and that there are ten millions of sovereigns in the till or vaults, under such circumstances the uninitiated are prone to believe that those ten millions are available. This would be a grave error. As twenty millions of notes in the banking department exceed by six millions the fourteen millions of bullion to circulate on Government securities, the issue department can not relax its hold on the ten million sovereigns in its coffers, because the banking department owes it six millions of those sovereigns to cover the six million of notes above the fourteen million of securities; therefore, in the case here supposed, the available surplus is only four millions to sustain all the monetary wants of the country, ordinary and extraordinary—the contingencies of which no man of business, much less a certain demand for the necessities of internal trade. The evidence of the Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England given before the Lords' Committee in 1848 bears directly on the position we have described. After declaring that the Bank was called upon to pay more than a million and a half in the banking department they must have stopped payment, they were asked "If there had been no separation between the two departments, and the Bank of England had been conducted on the old principle, instead of being within one million and a half of stopping, there would have been very nearly £8,500,000 of treasure in your vaults?" they answered, "We should have had £8,500,000 in our vaults." It is clear, therefore, that the Bank has not that command over its own capital which it ostensibly appears to possess in the eyes of the public; for in 1847 a docket might have been struck against it had not the law been suspended in its favour, though it was only paying twenty shillings in the pound, could it have released its bullion and compelled the Government to pay their debt.

Such, then, is the present position of the Bank as a national establishment. We have now to view it as a joint-stock company, in which character it comes into direct competition with the discount-houses. After the disastrous panic of 1857—which prostrated many firms solvent in property, but insolvent in gold coin, a timely deficiency they were not to be forgiven—while the institution in Threadneedle-street itself—the Bank resolved to withhold all future accommodation from the brokers. Both, indeed, were doing the same kind of business, so that they were rivals for profit. At whatever rate the Bank put the terms of discount, the brokers contented themselves with a lower fraction, and thus the latter secured a majority of customers. As there is no friendship in trade, the Bank determined to cripple their opponents, and closed their doors against the usual applications. Such is the origin of the pending dispute, and the reason why Messrs. Overend, Gurney, and Co. withdrew their deposits, which, however, they soon returned. Their act cannot be considered one of hostility to the Bank, but as a protest against the law of 1844, which the members of their house condemned both in the panics of 1847 and 1857, by evidence before the Parliamentary Committees. Without blaming the Bank, the above brokers deserve a vote of public consideration. The Legislature has wisely adopted the principles of free trade, which, practically, means more trade; but how can this be carried out if the instruments of buying and selling are restricted by law? If fifty bills of lading are deposited for the use of legal tender where under the protective system only ten bills of lading were offered, while the lawful money of the realm is limited to what it was in 1844, how can this increased trade, for which we are all striving, be realised? When the medium of circulation is thus intensely pressed upon must not discount rise to a ruinous rate and swallow up the fair profits of the merchant, even if effected at a loss? Here it is that the shoe pinches both the Bank and the brokers, and the fact is that they have a common grievance to redress. We are, indeed, jwarned of the danger of overtrading and we are no friends to reckless speculation; but let the terms be intelligibly defined. Does it mean, yes or no, an amount of trade over or above the metallic reserves of the Bank without the slightest reference to the commercial policy of the empire and to the monetary demands of those who live by buying and selling and are eager to pay taxes? It should be intended to be the intention be openly and without equivocation declared, and the country will know from authority that the money law is designed to strangle free trade, and render its enunciation a mockery and a snare. At present the brokers are compelled to accommodate their legitimate business, and blame the Bank. The Bank replies that it is under a prior obligation to protect its bullion, and it must discharge that duty before it attempts to facilitate trade; that, if it imposes failure on its rivals, it is because it is fettered itself. Whatever jealousy may arise between the two as mere dealers in money is a very minor question. The truth is, that, if all the gold plate in the kingdom were sunk at the Nore, none would be injured but its owners; but, if a million or two of sovereigns are exported in exchange for an equivalent in some other form of property, convulsion rages in all the markets of industry. And this will continue so long as our monetary system, falsely called metallic, rests on the basis of an inverted pyramid, where on the foundation of a comparatively few ounces of gold is reared up a superstructure of bank notes and bills of exchange representing in ordinary times three hundred millions sterling of promises to pay. The column is imposing by its loftiness, but it is as hollow as a drum.

"AN ENGLISH FARMYARD—SUMMER-TIME."

BY A. F. ROLFE AND J. F. HERRING.

MR. A. F. Rolfe has produced in this ingenious composition his very ideal of the farmyard, as it should be; and Mr. J. F. Herring has liberally supplied it with live-stock, such as few but himself can produce; the result of their combined exertions being a most pleasing picture, the characteristic truth of which will come home to all who are familiar with rural life and scenery. The timber, farmhouse and outbuildings, which have the very aspect of substantiality and comfort, are situated in a pretty lie of country, well gifted by nature in every respect, and watered by a small stream which intervenes the land. Figs and poultry, whose appearance does ample justice to their keep remain and disport about in all directions; and a group of cows and cattle loiters by this well-stocked hay-stall. All nature seems to gasp and smile in its fulness of joy beneath the summer sun, which adds a radiant aspect to a spot eminently endowed with content and healthful action.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Emperor Napoleon entered his fifty-third year yesterday week. The Empress and Empress will leave Paris at the end of this month, to visit Queen Victoria at Osborne. On their return they will proceed to Nice and Savoy. During their absence the Palace of the Tuileries will undergo extensive repairs. The Pavilion de Flore is to be rebuilt, and the wing of the palace adjoining the Rue de Rivoli is to be considerably enlarged.

The treaty which effects the annexation of Savoy and the county of Nice to France is completed, a new military command will be organised, and the Emperor proposes to appoint Marshal Randon.

The Union newspaper (Legitimist) has been "invited," unofficially, to discontinue its animadversions on King Victor Emmanuel under pain of receiving an official warning.

Arrangements are being made to open to the public the new zoological garden in the Bois de Boulogne early next month. Henceforth Paris will enjoy, to the advantage of the public, the rivalry of the Jardin de Plantes, and the other in the Bois de Boulogne.

The twelfth Exhibition of the progress of industry made has been opened in Paris. The congress is composed of 150 delegates, representing the academies and learned or agricultural societies from various parts of France.

THE VOTING IN SAVOY.

The Moniteur of Thursday morning publishes the following telegram:—

"CHAMBERY, April 25.—The result of the votin i is less than twenty-three votes. The total number of votes recorded, 67,968; of which 65,658 ayes, 71 noes."

FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.—PROPOSED EUROPEAN CONGRESS.

M. Thouvenel has sent to Dr. Kern an explanation of his despatch of the 13th of March, wherein it was assumed that Switzerland had consented to cede a few cantons to the profit of Savoy. M. Thouvenel says he understood the Swiss note to claim either the maintenance of the status quo, or the neutralisation of certain districts, but only in case France should take the whole of Savoy. M. Thouvenel concludes by regretting the publication of the denial as an injurious step.

The Swiss Government has completely defeated M. Thouvenel's attempt, in the sitting of March 15, to place the Swiss people and cantons in the position of a conquered country, which, in the words of the Emperor, was willing to obtain the dismemberment of Savoy by a private treaty. It has published the correspondence between Dr. Kern and M. Thouvenel on the 13th of March, and in which the wishes of the Swiss Federal Council are stated with great clearness.

A letter from the Prussian states Baron de Manteuffels remitted on Thursday week to the Federal Council the reply of Austria to the Swiss note of the 19th March, and which says that Austria is altogether reassuring to Switzerland.

Baron Kern, the Swedish Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a note dated March 27, replies to M. Thouvenel's message of 13th of March. His Excellency particularly supports the claims of Switzerland, which are founded on ancient treaties, and pronounces himself in favour of the neutralisation of the districts of Chablais and Faucigny.

According to Mr. Reuter's telegrams from Vienna, the negotiations which have taken place at the Austrian Government between the Federal districts of Savoy have resulted in the agreement of a majority of those Powers to an arrangement. If this arrangement be concluded, the Swiss Federal Council will accept it. The arrangement is destined to reserve the guarantees claimed in favour of Switzerland, which the protocol will be signed by that Ambassadors at Paris. In pursuance of this protocol France will subsequently make such concessions as will be considered just, and the European Conference will hold only one sitting, "in which the bases of the direct arrangement between France and Switzerland will solely be discussed and settled." Le Constitutionnel states unhesitatingly that "there will be neither Congress nor Conference concerning the facts accomplished at the foot of the Alps."

ITALY.

UPPER AND CENTRAL ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel is making a triumphal progress through his new dominions. Following the friendly advice of France (so we are told by a telegram from Turin), he has, for the moment, abandoned the idea of visiting the tomb of the King of Italy. Guests of the Tuileries represented that such a change of title would only complicate the difficulties and difficulties, without giving any practical advantage to Piedmont.

Count Cavour returned to Turin on Monday last.

THE PAPAL STATES.

The Pope has succeeded in contracting a loan of £2,000,000 in Belgium, and has appointed a committee, composed of Cardinals Wiseman, Villecourt, and Reisach to receive voluntary contributions for the support of the Papal troops. General Lamoricière's reorganisation of the Pope's army is effected on the basis which it is believed to contemplate, will be so expensive as to exhaust the Roman resources for a long time, and will necessitate a heavy draft for raising funds to support the troops. General Lamoricière has gone to Ancona, where he will reside for some time. The Pope has appointed Monsignore Count Merode, of Belgium, as Minister of War, which Ministry was provisionally directed by Cardinal Antonelli.

Letters state that thirteen individuals have been shot at Palermo. Several remedies of Government are being tried. The troops of General Pianelli have changed their position. Several detachments have been sent to the interior. The news of repeated insurrection at Trapani and in the towns of the littoral districts has been denied. The interest taken in the debate was very great. Long before the doors were opened every avenue was thronged by persons eager to hear it. Prince Frederick William was present both days, and the gallery set apart for the diplomatic body was filled. The Austrian and Bavarian Ambassador was also present. The result of the vote was received with loud cheers. As the vote implied a vote of confidence in the Government the Ministers abstained from voting.

Momentous news reaches us from Vienna. According to a despatch dated the 19th inst. the resignation of Archduke Albert, Governor of Hungary, has been accepted, and General Benedek is appointed as his successor. The Emperor has resolved to abolish the two great subdivisions of Hungary, which have existed since 1848, and to re-establish the comitats, which will be called upon to make propositions destined to bring about the assembling of a Diet composed according to ancient custom. Orders have been sent to regulate immediately the question of the communes. The appointment of General Benedek will be very popular in Hungary, and the Imperial decrees will, it is thought, be well received by the patriots.

Another telegram says that the above important concessions are in connection with a complete change in the Governmental system. Count Rechberg will go to Paris, as all the premises of the treaty, to a kind of federal system, which, without excluding uniformity in the action of the Cabinets, will leave to each country its proper principle of nationality and to the particular requirements of each province.

It is reported that the Emperor Francis Joseph will be crowned King of Hungary.

He was then stripped upon his blanket, tied down to the ground, and set it on fire! He then confessed that he and a negro named Jack, belonging to Mr. Cox, had murdered the negro and buried him beneath the dead. One fact, however, greatly invalidated this testimony, and that was that Mr. M——— and Mr. Norvell were deadly enemies, and the latter slaves claimed to them. A large quantity of fat pine was piled around them, and J. L. M——— set it on fire. In a few minutes nothing but charred and blackened corpses remained. RELIGIOUS AND BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS

WHEN are called the "May Meetings," which form so striking a manifestation of the religious and benevolent character of the people of London, commenced—a number of them being invariably held in the latter part of the month of May—they were almost exclusively confined to the various religious, educational, and charitable character, held their annual meetings at this period of the year. The following is a list of the principal of these meetings:—

The annual meeting of the LONDON DOCKYARD HOME MISSION was held on Monday at St. James's Hall, the Bishop of London presiding. The report stated that the Home Mission to the Docks had carried out during the past year in two ways—the employment of missionary clergy and the establishment of a lay-agency and lay-services for the seamen in the Winter-season. There are six missionaries at present employed—two in the east, two in the south, and two in the west. The docks are visited daily by the metropolis. These missionaries preach in the open air, wherever they have opportunity, and in the neighbourhood of the docks. The Bethel Union Ships had been hired and services instituted, in the hope that these would prove beneficial to the seamen frequenting the docks in the winter. The Bishops of London and Oxford, the Earl of Carnarvon, Mr. Blamey Roberts, and other gentlemen addressed the meeting. The thanks to the chairman for the great interest taken by him in all the operations of the Home Mission were unanimously accorded.

On the same day the annual meeting in connection with the BIBLE READERS' MISSION was held at Exeter Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. It was numerously attended, and was presided over by Mr. Benjamin Scott. The report stated that the Bible Readers' Mission had now 100 agents and 200 teachers in the Sunday-schools, and that during the latter more than 4000, and at the Ragged-schools 2000 children had been baptised. There were 7000 adults who had been visited by the missionaries, and 1000 who had been brought to public worship, in connection with which there were 1100 teachers, and upwards of 1000 children. The income for the past year had been £3771 8s. 3d., and the expenditure £3826 16s. 6d.

On Tuesday last were held several of these meetings, viz.:—

The meeting of the ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THE DEAF AND DUMB was held at the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor in the chair. The report stated that the books there were the names of 500 deaf and dumb, who had been seen by the visitors of the association, and many more were known to be found in a state of extreme wretchedness, and destitute even of the necessaries of life.

The anniversary meeting of the LONDON SOCIETY FOR TEACHING THE BLIND TO READ was held at Exeter Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury and Lord Henry Cholmondeley. There are fifty pupils now in the school, who are daily receiving instruction in reading, music, and various trades. All the progress more being very surprising. At the same time the industrial work, such as making mats, baskets, and net work, was also going on, and many former pupils are now in a position to earn an independent income; in addition to which 1000 blind persons had received relief in various districts for several.

The fifth annual meeting of the PROTESTANT ALLIANCE was held at the Freemasons' Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. Mr. John M'Gregor, the secretary, read the report, which has been already noticed, and various addresses were delivered.

The SEVENTH annual general meeting of the CHURCH OF ENGLAND SUNDAY-SCHOOL INSTITUTION was held in the large room, Exeter Hall. The Bishop of Winchester presided, and was supported by the Earl of Harrowby. The report of the committee was read, by which it appeared that the expenditure during the year was £4002 4s. 6d., and the receipts were £4000 16s. 9d.

The fourth annual meeting of the supporters of the CITY OF LONDON ASYLUM SCHOOL was held in Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., in the chair. The annual public meeting of the AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY was held at the London Tavern, Mr. Benjamin Scott presiding. During the year 1859 there were 1,170 visits paid to the aged poor, and 1,000 relief. Resolutions pledging the meeting to support the society were adopted.

The annual meeting of the ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF ADDITIONAL CURATES IN POPULOUS PLACES, a society now supporting in various parts of the metropolis upwards of twenty curates, was held, and resulted in the endowment of forty-one poor livings, held its anniversary meeting in Exeter Hall. The Bishop of London was in the chair, and stated which it made in the preceding year. The income realised for the year 1859 was £3,000, and the expenditure was declared to be £29,911 19s. Sixteen livings were declared to be endowed, viz., Bethnal-green, Bermondsey, Bishopsgate, St. Bath and Wells and Exeter, giving a total of £1,200 a-year, and £20,000 capital. He had been compelled to commence with the society's operations in support of additional clergy engaged in populous places, and the total number of curates now aided by the society is £23,815 5s. 8d. A total of 417 grants had been voted, at an outlay of £23,815 5s. 8d., and applications for 200 more had been made, and were under favourable consideration by the society. The fund for assisting in the endowment of poor livings, and which was commenced in 1857, had now been nearly raised to the amount of £34,000. The society aimed at largely augmenting all poor livings, and thereby securing permanent relief to the clergy in poor livings generally, and thus to give permanence to the multiplication of the clergy to be provided for by purchasing from living occupied by unsalaried means and pecuniary difficulties.

On the same day were held the anniversary meetings of the Royal Society of Literature, St. Mark's Hospital, the Church of England, Scripture Readers' Association, and the School of Industry for Female Orphans.

The Bishop of London presided, and there were also present the Bishop of Llandaff, the Bishop of Lahore, Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood, the Rev. Dr. Jelf, Principal of King's College, and others of note. The report stated that the number of nurses trained during the year 1859 was 100, exceeding by one the number which had been granted to the operations of the institution, and for the decided progress which it had made during the past year.

ENORMOUS FRAUDS.—The Union Bank of London has just discovered defalcations on the part of the cashier, Mr. Pullinger, to the extent of £63,000, supposed to have been spent in speculations on the Stock Exchange during the last five years. The delinquent, who is forty-eight years of age, and described as about the most regular and quiet man in the establishment, seems to have carried on these gigantic frauds by means of a forged pass-book, representing the account of the Union Bank with the Bank of England. His salary for some years past has been £500, and recently it was raised to £600. The directors of the Union Bank have issued a report with respect to these disclosures. To meet them it is proposed to transfer the sum of £119,000, which in July last was placed to the capital account from the reserve fund, and to appropriate the further sum of £100,000, the amount of the estimated profits for the present year, leaving the dividend-balance to be provided out of the profits of the present year.—Edward Pullinger, cashier of the Union Bank of London, was taken before the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House on Thursday, charged with stealing £1340 from his employers. The prisoner was remanded.

THE LIGHTING OF THE HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—A Committee of the House of Commons to inquire whether Parliament can provide or recommend "further facilities for the healthful ventilation of the Houses of Parliament," has been reported in favour of throwing open to the public on weekday evenings the Committee-room on the Ministerial side of the Speaker's Chair.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Last week the births of 923 boys and 884 girls—in all 1707 children—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-59 the average number was 1,463. The deaths in London were 1294 in the week that ended last Saturday, and exhibited a decrease from the number in the preceding week, which was 1407. The deaths of last week were more numerous by 164 than they would have been if the average rate of mortality for the middle of April had prevailed. Of 13 deaths from suffocation returned last week, 11 were those of infants suffocated in bed. Two deaths from fright were returned, one of them a child frightened to death from burns.

AN ACQUITTAL AFTER FIRE-RELEASE.—At the Thames Police Court yesterday week a somewhat curious circumstance occurred in connection with the late Dockhead fire-raising disturbances. Mr. Selfe referred to having convicted a man named Dickinson, who was brought before him on the charge of having assaulted and interrupted the police while engaged in church on the previous day. Mr. Selfe said he had discovered that he possessed no power to commit the prisoner under the Malicious Injuries Act under which the man was convicted—and he therefore returned the money out of the fine of 40s. which had been inflicted him, paying it out of his own pocket.

ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—On Sunday evening during service, the gas went out in the parish church of St. George's-in-the-East, owing to the failure of the supply. The church was crowded in every part, and, among the great numbers, set up a simultaneous scream from all parts of the church, while from the galleries there was a rush of persons who were anxious to get them fresh screams from those who were rushing frantically down the aisles. The confusion was increased by the loud voice calling on the people to keep their seats; others began to sing the Doxology, while the organist endeavoured to play the tune, and the clergyman at the lectern to read before his instrument was capable. All this time there was pulling, howling, pushing, and struggling at the doors. By means of lights and the timely catching of which many of the boys in the gallery appeared to have a plentiful supply, the confusion was somewhat allayed, and the Rev. Mr. King was seen still standing at the desk, and Mr. Lowder, one of the parochial clergy, running to him from amidst the crowd of worshippers at the altar, unavailingly entreating him to come down. The "congregation" got more calmed as the clergymen appeared, and, standing at the top of their voices, began to sing profane songs instead of the Doxology, and in the midst of the uproar Mr. King left the desk, and Mr. Lowder returned from the altar with him to the vestry. Mr. Cook, the parish clerk, shortly afterwards came out into the middle of the aisle, and, standing, and announced that the service would not be continued. Mr. Inspector Bond, at the same time, was standing in the church with a body of police and cleared the place. The parishioners have paid the penalty inflicted upon Mr. Rector for the riot in the church on Sunday week. Mr. Lowder and Mr. Rooker's expenses his regret at this course, inasmuch as he had positively determined not to pay anything, and to risk all consequences.

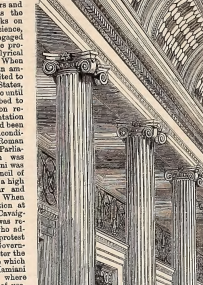
LITERATURE.

RIGHTS OF NATIONS; or, the New Law of European States applied to the Affairs of Italy. By Count MAMIANI, Minister of Public Instruction in the Kingdom of Sardinia. Translated from the Italian, and edited, with the Author's Additions and Corrections, by ROGER ACTON. W. Jeffs.

This is a translation of a work which, under the title of "D'Un Nuovo Diritto Europeo," has attracted some attention both in France and England in those circles in which foreign literature is current, but only on account of its abstract value as a political treatise, but because of its immediate applicability to the existing condition of the affairs of Italy, and also on account of the position which its author, Count Mamiani, occupies in the Ministry of the Italian kingdom which has been recently formed. Of the qualification of Mamiani to deal with the subject before us a slight sketch of his life will, we think, go far to prove. He was born at Pesaro, in the Romagna, which during his childhood formed part of that kingdom of Italy which was established by the first Napoleon. In the insurrection of the Roman Legations in 1831 Mamiani played a leading part, and he was the only member of the Provisional Government of that period who refused to sign the capitulation with Austria. He was one of thirty-eight persons specially exempted from the amnesty which was afterwards proclaimed; and, having sailed with General Zucchi and some others — Romans and Modenese—from a port on the Adriatic coast, the party was captured by an Austrian cruiser, and suffered nine months' captivity at Venice. On his release Mamiani repaired to Paris, where he resided for fifteen years, in the midst of a brilliant circle of Italian scholars and philosophers, and was the author of several works on mental and moral science, and, besides being engaged in literary criticism, he produced some poetry, lyrical and contemplative. When Pius IX. proclaimed an amnesty Mamiani was invited to return to the Roman States, but he declined to do so until a clause which prescribed to every political exile on returning a formal renunciation of previous offences had been modified for his unconditional resumption of Roman citizenship. When a Parliamentary Constitution was formed in 1848 Mamiani was President of the Council of Ministers, and gained a high reputation for honour and skill as a statesman. When the French intervention at Rome, proposed by Cavaignac, was decided it was resisted by Mamiani, who addressed a solemn protest against it to all the Governments of Europe. After the disasters to the cause which he espoused in 1849 Mamiani retired to Piedmont, where he pursued a career of usefulness. He founded the Academy of Genoa and discharged the office of Professor of Modern History in the University of Turin. He has been a member for Genoa and another constituency in the Piedmontese Chamber of Deputies, and supported ably the national and progressive policy of the Sardinian Government. Last January, when the most favourable turn of Italian affairs enabled Count Cavour to resume the direction of the King's Council, he obtained the co-operation of Mamiani in the Ministry of Public Instruction.



THE PUBLIC LIBRARY AT MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 410.

Among a class of writers who, from peculiar causes, are unusually numerous in Italy, Count Mamiani has now taken an elevated rank. The object of the present work is to inculcate the doctrine of "self-rule" among nations, in a sense which is at once safe and practical. The author does not appear to think of an absolute sovereignty of the people, but a prudent and coarser sense any more than he admits the dogma of historic and hereditary legitimacy amounting to a right divine. In his idea the composition of a State in the abstract should arise from the tacit union of the rich nations of the country, which, whatever be their form, always provided that it founds its moral unity on a loyal attachment and a general sentiment of national allegiance of the people to their own country. Such, at least, seems to us, in the fewest possible words, to be the basis of a treatise essentially philosophic-political; and, if this be so, the author has acquired great popularity in Italy, it is indeclinable to address itself with some directness to the more enlarged thinkers of the Italian political economy; while its immediate application to the present state of Italian affairs is still more apparent. If, as we believe, he has acquired great popularity in Italy, it is a mark of the capability of the Italians to discuss and to apprehend the principles of abstract right, the laws of nature and of nations, the proper basis of civil society, and the relations of States to each other; and it adds another to their many claims to that constitutional freedom which has only been more than dawned upon them. Looked at from this point of view, this book is adapted largely to enhance our estimation of the intellectual standard of Italy in modern times, and, as Mr. Acton states in his very able and comprehensive preface, will go far to "dispel that painting, sculpture, and the opera; the Campanile of marble still eloquent in its age, and the Decameron of humorous fancy laughing in the street below; the poems of Petrarch, Ariosto, and Tasso moving, musical, magically coloured, the depths and heights of Dante, sweet and stern, are not exactly all that Italy has given to the world: for in almost every department of liberal and rationalistic inquiry there were bold and vigorous thinkers in the south long previous to Locke, or Voltaire, or Lessing." Mr. Acton also points out that this volume not only throws some beneficial light on the present affairs of Italy, but it aids at the same time in supplying much towards the attainment of political knowledge in regard to the doctrine of nonintervention. It is only common justice to note that the preliminary remarks of the translator and editor are worthy of all acceptation as an introduction to a book itself, more or less necessary, according to the degree of knowledge of the subject in each individual reader; and a perusal of them is calculated, we think, to win many a student for the work which it might not otherwise obtain. Without saying that he is an enthusiast in regard to Italian nationality—a term which, to us, always seems to imply something of an unreasoning nature—Mr. Acton is thoroughly at one with his author. This is obviously an immense advantage to a translator; and, as far as one is competent to form an opinion without an opportunity of consulting the original, we should say that he has succeeded in conveying the exact meaning of the writer in English phraseology. We have not been able to detect any instances of obscurity; and, in a few notes, he could not hope to preserve the sixty grace, the propriety, and the rhetorical beauties of Mamiani's style, still we have reason to think that there is a loftiness and a roundness in the turn of expression pervading every page which takes the book entirely out of the category of mere ordinary bald translation.

THE QUEENS OF SOCIETY. By GRACE and PHILIP WHARTON. James Hogg and Sons.

The idea of this book may be said to be good, and the title has an air of originality about it. The notion is to present in a single work the biographies of eighteen ladies who, in their day and in their particular spheres, exercised that sort of moral or social dominion which erected them into a species of sovereigns of society. The authors make a selection of names which, in the main, is unexceptionable. Mdme. de Sevigné the intimate of the Armaulds and Rochefoucald's; Mdme. Récamier of Chateaubriand; Mdme. du Deffand of Voltaire and Horace Walpole; Necker received advice from, and Schlegel was the companion of, Madame de Staël; Mrs. Thrale was the friend of Johnson; Lady Caroline Lamb of Byron; Mrs. Montagu of Beattie; Lady Pembroke of Sir Philip Sydney; and Mdme. de Maintenon the consoler of Scarron and the chief counsellor of Louis XIV.

It will be seen from names here incidentally introduced that the selection of personages for the purpose of the histories presented in the volume under consideration is such as must excite popular interest and attention. The only names we have omitted hitherto are those of Lady Horvey, that famous Mary Lepell who became the wife of the "Lord Fanny" whom Pope has immortalised unkindly; and Anne Seymour Damer, daughter of General Conway, the friend of Rome, Fox, Nelson, and, long before him, Horace Walpole, a sculptor and an actress, with whom Mrs. Siddons appeared on a private stage. In addition to the attraction which the consideration of the lives of such a bevy of female notabilities affords there is ample opportunity in recording their histories for giving illustrations of the times in which they lived; certainly, the period over which the biographies under discussion extend is ample and comprehensive. It can hardly be said that this portion of the work has been satisfactorily performed, although it has been not unconsciously attempted. Indeed, as a literary production, in the artistic sense, we are afraid that not much can be said of the book. It is, we think, quite possible, if not easy, to detect the individual characteristics of the joint authors, and ascertain which comes from the man and which from the female pen. The experiment, although it is stated that it was adopted for reasons sufficient to the writers, seems to us defective; and, if we were to distinguish the prevailing spirit of the whole, we should say that it was a good-natured credulity. With obvious faults of construction and carrying out of details, there can, we think, be no question of the interest of the book; and if, as we presume, it is the production of new candidates for literary honours, the choice of its subject alone may be considered creditable to them.

MEMOIR OF THE LIFE OF ARY SCHEFFER. By MRS. GROTE. Murray.

This is not merely the life of Scheffer the artist, it is rather more—a memoir of Scheffer the man. It is accompanied by the author that many notices have been given to the world on the subject of Ary Scheffer's works; some particulars have also been published with regard to the personal history of the painter; but the object of the present work is to put into a connected form such incidents and particulars as are calculated to form a welcome addition to the sketches which have already appeared, which, taken in a biographical point of view, leave much to be desired. In truth, Scheffer's life was not by any means that of an absorbed and preoccupied artist. He was an ardent and active politician, the cast of his mind and sentiments being undoubtedly democratic; and early in life, embarking in hostility to the Government of the Restoration in France, he became a member of the confederacy entitled the "Carbonari," and engaged to a considerable extent in the secret organisation then widely prevalent in the country of his adoption; for, though resident from 1811 in France, and classed as a painter of the French school, Scheffer was the son of a German, whose wife was a native of Dordrecht in Holland. The Duke of Orleans, in drawing and painting, and this event exercised a sensible influence over his whole subsequent career. This was Holland. It was his intimate connection with this prince of political opinion and movement which brought him into contact with Lafayette, and into the active circle which assembled from time to time at La Grange. About 1822 the failure of some attempts against the Government of the day was engaged, seemed to have moderated Scheffer's political feelings, and his admiration of his patron, the Duke of Orleans, and that they gave way to assiduous labour in his art. From that time his pencil took a higher range than before, and his reputation steadily rose; but it is to the example of Ingres, and the admiration of his pictures, that Scheffer's permanent taste and style are attributed; for it is stated that a marked change in his mode is to be observed as dating from the year 1824, and the influence of Ingres is supposed to have been felt by him. In 1826 Scheffer became instructor of the children of Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, in drawing and painting, and this event exercised a sensible influence over his whole subsequent career. This was a sensible influence over his whole subsequent career. This was owing to the very last by devotion to that branch of the house of Bourbon. It can only be indicated here how that Scheffer was among those who fought with distinction on the three days of July against the Government of Charles X., and that he accompanied Thiers to Neuilly with the first communication to the Duke of Orleans which opened the way to his final attainment of the throne of France. From that time his life was one of assiduous attention to his profession and of devotion to the house of Orleans, exercised in every possible way, his crowning act being a visit to the exiled family in England on the occasion of the death of the Duchess of Orleans in 1858, at a moment when his own life hung upon a thread, for it was closed within a few days of his return to France. It may be satisfactory to know that a visit to the Fine Arts Collection at Manchester in 1857 had the effect of proving to Scheffer the worth of the English school of art. Of the existence of a British school of painters he was aware, but he had never understood its real value until then. The power of dealing with colour especially possessed by the English artists fills one with admiration. I only wish it could be imparted to myself." Why a biographer has been hinted here to show that this is a book which contains the record of the life not only of a painter of genius, but in many other respects a very remarkable and a very interesting character.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1860.

It is by no means certain that the mind of Parliament is made up to pass a measure for the amendment of the representation of the people this year. In truth, all the indications point the other way. There is a kind of dalliance with the subject on the part of the Government also which augurs an indifference nearly equal to that of the Legislature. When it is remembered how energetically and how effectually Lord Palmerston forced the Divorce Bill two or three years ago through the midst of a well-organised resistance, even as late as the month of August, the idea naturally arises that in the present case he is not putting out any very strong exercise of will to keep the House of Commons up to the regular and consecutive consideration of the Reform Bill. The gentlemen who are technically called the Opposition have begun to adopt that Fabian policy which is exhibited in talking against time, and interposing those obstacles towards a continuous discussion which are at the command of the humblest member of that assembly. The Liberal representatives, even those who are Reformers in the most extended sense of the term, are in their way equally obstructive. They argue vigorously against the measure actually before them; and, while in the abstract they proclaim their principles, there is something about their way of proceeding which gives suspicion that the realisation of those principles is not exactly coexistent with their desires. The great element of criticism is to be found in the arraignment of the statistics on which the Government have founded their calculation of the addition that will be made to the franchise in boroughs; and we find members for large constituencies, alarmed possibly at the probable increase of those labours and responsibilities of their position, which are petty in the sense of being troublesome, which will accompany that addition, showing with intense earnestness how great that addition will be; while ever and anon, in half-hearted parentheses, they exclaim that there is nothing that they more eargerly covet. On the other hand, the Minister who is believed to have had the largest share in the preparation of the Government bill pledges himself unequivocally, and as the result of a second and careful examination, to the accuracy of the official figures. It is more than probable that the truth lies between the two. It is evident that the Government in their calculation rely a good deal on the inactivity of the persons qualified to obtain the franchise, which, as experience has shown, is considerable. It is also likely that, knowing as they do that much of the thinning of the registry of voters arises from the legal condition of the payment of rates and taxes which is attached to the attainment of the franchise, they depend on the partial retention of that condition in their measure for exercising a similar influence on the number of electors hereafter. It is quite possible, likewise, that those who direct attention with suspicious eagerness to the large augmentation to the number of holders of the suffrage which a £6 franchise threatens to create have omitted both these elements from their computation. After all, however, this is a question of statistics which, as every one knows, can be made to show anything. Figures can at any time be made to prove any given result except, perhaps, an actual fact. When, by the simplest manipulation of those elastic materials in skilled hands, the cashier of a bank can place a quarter of a million of money at his fraudulent disposal, it is not so improbable a matter as that an ingenious political arithmetician can add a hundred thousand voters or so to a proximate franchise.

Adopting this argument against Lord John Russell's scheme in its fullest extent, another section of its opponents has added to it the assertion that the real danger, as it is called, of the proposed borough franchise lies in the homogeneous character of the class of voters who would receive the suffrage. This objection has been taken up in its integrity and very elaborately discussed in at least two influential reviews, the sentiments of which have been always supposed to be in accordance with the most philosophical Liberalism. Indeed, so far has apprehension in reference to this zone, that very sober Conservatives have been heard to express an opinion that they would prefer to the plan proposed something like a well-considered and well organised universal suffrage. The reason that is given for extending the suffrage to every man who has given adequate hostages to the State for his good citizenship would be better calculated to secure a balance of classes in the representation than the sudden influx of large numbers of a single class, and that one which has certain peculiarities as a class attached to it, into the list of electors. If that opinion is really entertained by any of the party alluded to, we believe that an opportunity will be given during the Committee on the bill to declare and to indorse that sentiment. What, however, most prudent men would counsel would, we think, be this. Let Parliament cease to play at fast and loose with this question, as they are doing now. Every one knows that the bulk of the people of this country are, we will not say careless or indifferent to politics when things are going well with them, but prosperity gives a turn to their ideas and habits apart from the current considerations of the day, which makes them out of proportion, depression in trade, deficiency of employment, and the pressure of hard or troubled times, throws them into political agitation and turbulence, partly from the lack of occupation and partly from the disturbed habits of the poor of legislation to remedy social and industrial disorganisation. In such times as these, acting under a confidence that the pressure from without will act directly on their immediate wants and requirements, there will be a carelessness and recklessness as to the elective franchise; and who can say what the demands of an excited people may then be? A convulsion in Europe, not so very impossible or far-distant an occurrence—a bad harvest this year, or any of the disturbing causes of high political excitement which is supposed to exist at this moment—may suddenly induce a recollection that the Legislature has trifled with, if not treated with ridicule, the question of the admission to the suffrage of the great number of the people, including by far the bulk in its largest and best sense, of the people of this country. If a measure of reform, however comprehensive and expansive, were to be passed this year, we conscientiously believe that it would produce no very considerable, even if appreciable, change in the personal constitution of the House of Commons. Such a conviction may go far to remove probably the most real, although the most latent, objection to dealing with the subject of the representation of the large numbers of the people now excluded (as there is the rub) Parliament. If they are wise and prudent in their generation they will so act now as to gain that confidence from the country which will probably ensure them long Parliamentary tenure of office, and enable them to mould and fix the shape of the results of excited pressure from without, the chances of their future tenure of their seats will amount to just nothing.

AMERICAN journals tell us of the very grave and antagonistic attitude taken up by the Legislature and the Executive in reference to the demanded inquiry into the system of enormous corruption attributed to the latter. The President protests against the right of investigation, and is answered by a counter-protest against his doctrine in the Senate. Instead of attempting to meet attacks to the reports of some personal and most discreditable scenes in the House of Representatives, where the absence of all the self-restraint and decorum that should characterise a deliberative assembly is manifested, Chilton says in a ferocious duel with bowie-knives, the seconds to stand armed with "Colt's navy revolvers" in order to put a fatal stop to foul play, has been tendered by one member to another; but, it is to be hoped, insensibly checked, the only way out of the "difficulty" is announced to be a personal onslaught in the public street, a peaceful solution which was expected when the mail left, and which may have ere this eventuated the liberal use of Mr. Colt's celebrated specific. Our American friends ought not to need the assurance that we in England do not confound a mass of orderly and respectable gentlemen with the actors in such scenes; but we are a little puzzled to know why the exploits of one or two members is not as much a matter of course as it would be here, were it possible that the habits of ruffianism could for a moment be displayed in the House of Commons. Another negro has been burned alive in the presence of his fellow-slaves, by way of public illustration of the "domestic institution." He deserved to be hanged, if the evidence be reliable.

Lord Elgin has departed on his Chinese mission, but whether this be one of peace or war can be only matter of speculation at present. If the imposing force which the Earl will have with him be regarded by the Chinese as sufficiently powerful to make it a point of wisdom in them to treat the last affair as a mistake and to offer apologies, for he his Lordship to take such a step, the submission be obtained direct from the capital, and in the full view and to the complete comprehension of the governing orders, or we shall have all the work to do over again. As we seem to have made up our minds that it is for the good of China that Englishmen should have ample access to all her cities and ports, and that trade shall be free, it would be childish not to carry out our convictions in a practical manner. It is, we are inclined to think, probable that the expedition will not end without the terrible Armstrong gun being tested in a way that will interest civilised nations for several reasons. Fiat experimentum in corpore Orientali appears to be a maxim just now regarded with some favour.

While investigation is in hand it may be well to say no more upon the subject of the disclosures respecting our gun-boats except that there appears to be evidence of fraud on the part of contractors, and neglect on the part of inspectors, and that, as too often happens, the nation is cruelly wronged.

The age of faith seems to have come before its time, and before the world has been quite prepared for what Cicero says is "so divine," absolute confidence between man and man. One of the largest of our London banks, the Union, has been victimised to the amount of above a quarter of a million by one of its officers, and by such simple machinery. In Ben Jonson's great play, "The Alchemist," a person complains of the expensive materials required by Subtle for the transmutation of all metals into gold, alleging that it had been rumoured that somebody in Holland had found out the secret with the aid of "an eggshell and a paper of pin-dust." Mr. Pullinger's method of obtaining £300,000 that did not belong to him was almost as simple—his "mighty magic" being merely a duplicate pass-book, which it was the business of none of the "men of business" of the bank to verify.

The British Museum controversy continues to rage. One thing is curious. It is agreed on all hands that the books are not to be opened; and it would, indeed, be outrageous to suppose such a course, now that we have so noble a library and so splendid a reading circus in such admirable working. Yet are the readers not Squatters, and the "fixtures" of books, strictly speaking, out of the question connected with the original idea of a museum? The question, however, is not one to be asked: the books are fixtures. Then, is it the statue or the stuffed rhinoceros that is to decamp—or either? Mr. Panizzi has evidently a fixture in his office that will expire. It is called South Kensington, to be sure, but that was only for euphony and a certain other reason, but really it is Brompton, which is no distance to speak of when one is crossing Hyde-park, and Knightsbridge, and really Piccadilly. How absurd to talk of distances! But Bromptonia is blessed to rather coldly, especially by folk from the Victoria Park, which is by no means the other end of London, and yet is on the opposite side—four miles from Brompton Boilers; to visit entailing an eight-mile walk, therefore, besides its own fatigues, to people who have no money to swell the weekly puff of omnibus companies. The question is not an easy one; but, lessons in classical antiquities are chiefly interesting to the man that can command some kind of vehicle, whereas the birds, beasts, and fishes delight the humbler orders, we incline to say—if we cannot build (and why can we not?), send away Hyperion and keep Hippopotamus.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE Epsom Meeting was quite a two-days' success, and it was somewhat remarkable that both the great handicaps should have fallen to sons of Stockwell. The Metropolitan seems pretty well favoured by the three-year-olds, as they have won it eleven years out of fifteen. Castaly, who was not mentioned in the betting, completely spoiled the New Two-Year-Old Stakes by jumping off four lengths ahead of everything; and as there was no second money, Zodiac and the others did not persevere, and he won his £300 stake by some fifteen lengths. Promised Land made his own running, and gave nothing a chance over the Derby course for the Woodcote Stakes, thereby a little elating the supporters of Trenhuser, who had been favourably tried with him at Ascot. He is a 2l1b. The Member of the First Spring again proved Mr. Tom Brook's skill as a handicapper, and Umpire was at the top of the tree. Much has been pursuing for some three weeks back, has brought his into high favour at the Corner. The scratching of this horse and Buccaneer, who is to come to William Butler's for the last month, added to the virtual "knocking out" of The Wizard, after his trial, deprived what was once the very promising of Tyro Stakes of nearly all its interest. In fact, not a few of the country visitors avowed that they could not find a horse to go with Mr. Payne and Sayers, who both showed on the Heath, and mentally compared sores as they stood tandem tandem. About £360 was collected for the latter on Monday night, a noble sum of moneyless heading the list with £50; while, if rumour is to be believed, £100 a piece was sent privately from two others. Other Jokey Club races. Dover did say Two Thousand produces a greater surprise. Tom Bowline and Cape Flyaway had headed The Wizard so easily in the trial that all the stable-money had gone on to the former, and The Wizard's winter backers were left without a hope of getting out, and won their money simply because they could not help it. In vain did Mr. Nichol, owner, telegraph to get his off, as at the post almost all the Lapdog division of the Chancellor's friends did the same what they saw of him, and Lupellus seemed hardly up to the mark. From the Bushes The Wizard had it all his own way. And The Bay, who is also by West Australian, but did not run in the trial, was a fair second to him, Traducer third, and Lupellus, who was not "ridden home," fifth. The result seemed a surprise to every one dumb, and won the horse 5 to 1 for the Derby, for which, as far as looks go, he is still a particularly promising candidate. He is not made up much like his sire as he was last year, rather on the legs, and not very good behind the saddle. He is a bright bay, with a considerable star, and a white hind leg. Lupellus seemed hardly up to the mark. From the Bushes The Wizard had it all his own way. Tom up to the time of this trial, in which it would seem that, being a 2l1b. horse, he had to give 3l1b. to the much at starting. The Lapdog gallops remarkably well at Newmarket, but still the publis dared not do otherwise than follow the stable-money, which was put very freely on to Tom Bowline. He was the next fav-ke handicap, and had not a ghost of a chance. The field included fifteen, the largest that we ever remember to have seen at the post of the Derby, and rods the winner a pound over weight as the weather was sadly against "weighty." Richmond's chance was quite out as they went down the Burbes hill.

Chester has, as usual, a strong list for next week. On Tuesday Folkestone (Oh, Jemmy Ashmall!) Handicaps; and Oak, Forester, and Butterfly in the Falstine. Petra, 5st. 12lb., has come to the head of the Chester Cup betting since his success at Newmarket, and Land, 8st., has his admirers, but still there is at present no very "hot favourite" for the Cup. Galopin, 5st., has been steadily backed for some weeks, and ought to run forward; and after his performance under that weight last year the chance of Underhand, 8st., should not be ill. There seems no doubt whether Underhand will go for his race on Thursday; but if he has any of the Derby pretensions, which his friends assert that he has not yet, he ought not to miss this stake of nearly £600 with such a wretchedly weak field against him. Mr. Howard's Cup and Chester Vase Handicap Stakes are the principal events, and both the Worcal and the Eaton have filled very badly.

Mr. Savey has returned to England after an absence of some thirteen weeks in Italy and the East. His time was principally occupied by his visit to Athens, among the Greeks, whose horsemanship peculiarities he specially went to observe. It is, we believe, his wish to complete his stud without delay, and give Paris one public exhibitions in the United Kingdom, and then leave for America in the autumn. Belfast, where he goes next week, is the first town on his list.

Lord Hawke has suddenly withdrawn his proposition to resign the membership of the Marylebone Club, and hence the meeting of subscribers, which was fixed for last Tuesday at Doncaster, came to nothing. It is expected that Lord Hawkhan will hold the west side of the Badsworth country with his new pack, and Mr. Foljambe has also consented to relinquish to his Lordship a portion of the Grove country south of Doncaster.

THE WESTON COMMISSION.—A Parliamentary document showing the expenses incurred by the Gun Commission has just been issued. The total amount is £9835 9s. 6d., and one or two of the items are deserving of notice. In the first place, Mr. Bidder, £215 for sixty days' attendance as a Commissioner; while Mr. Dove, a salaried officer of the Home of Commons, received three guineas per day for his services as secretary, exclusive of a sum of £84 5s. for travelling expenses. But the most astonishing item in the charge is that which Mr. Quilter, Rifle Factory, Enfield, has been accustomed to receive for simply handing to examine the above accounts. They are services at £5000 for 1856, 1857, and 1858, an estimate which the official auditor is by no means disposed to endorse. That gentleman declares that Messrs. Quilter and Co.'s report was of "no practical value," and that "considerably less than half the amount they have claimed would afford ample remuneration for their labour, supposing that the time claimed had been usefully employed." This charge has therefore been disallowed, and the Treasury concurs with the auditor in characterising the claims as "enormous and extravagant." Messrs. Quilter, however, refuse to abate one farthing.

TAKING POSSESSION OF ALTON TOWERS BY THE EARL OF SHREWSBURY.—THE LUNCHEON IN THE TALBOT GALLERY.—DRAWN BY J. F. A. LYNCH.

PUBLIC ENTRY OF THE EARL OF SHREWSBURY AND TALBOT INTO ALTON TOWERS.

On Friday, the 13th inst., the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot made his public entry into Alton. From all parts of North Staffordshire people crowded to the scene of festivity, and in several of the towns the shops were closed and business suspended. The procession was formed at Blount's-green, about one mile south of Uttoxeter, on the Lichfield road. About eleven o'clock the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, Viscount Ingestre, M.P., and lady, and a distinguished party of the nobility, arrived in six carriages and four. The procession moved in the following order:—The Uttoxeter troop of Yeomanry; tenantry; the Cheadle troop of Yeomanry; tenantry and friends; the personal friends of the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury; Lord Viscount Ingestre and Lady and friends; and the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury and Talbot. As soon as the carriage containing the latter arrived opposite the principal entrance to the Tower the band struck up "See, the Conquering Hero comes," and the cheers from the immense crowd were almost deafening. The distinguished party passed into the Tower by the principal entrance, and the Earl, ascending to the top of the ladder at the Shot Tower, where his flag was floating, waved his hat amid the cheers of the spectators. The party then proceeded to a platform which had been erected in the terrace gardens, where addresses were presented to his Lordship from his tenantry in six counties, and from some of the surrounding Staffordshire townships, congratulating his Lordship on his accession to his new title and lands. The noble Earl returned thanks in a speech of much feeling, and was heartily cheered throughout its delivery. Cheers were also given for the Countess of Shrewsbury and Viscount Ingestre.

His Lordship and his party then returned into the mansion, where luncheon had been provided for them. They were immediately followed by those of the company who had been furnished with the necessary cards. These also partook of an excellent luncheon, which had been provided by Messrs. Staples, and was tastefully spread in one continuous line through the armoury, the picture gallery, the Talbot gallery, the two libraries, the dining-room, and another apartment, which, as the whole of the spacious mansion is now unfurnished, was admirably fitted for the purpose. Upwards of 23,000 visitors partook of refreshment during the afternoon.

TANTALLON CASTLE. BY J. STER, IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 421

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

PLACE for their Lordships! The Upper House has had one of its spasmodic fits of activity. The holders of the democratic opinion that the Chamber of Peers is a registry for the decrees of the Commons must have scowled at the notice-paper of the Lords as it appeared for this week. Nevertheless, it is well known to the initiated that a very full list of orders and notices for a particular evening in that House means a flood of postponements, and the actual production of a single subject. Indeed, there was a quabble the other night when Lord Normanby, asserting their principle, wanted to get precedence for a motion of his over some law bills that stood before him; and the House got a wigging from the indefatigable Chancellor because of their assumption of their inability to deal with more than one subject a night. Peers are eminently domestic and do not dine en garçon in their dilettante refreshment-room, but like to get to their home banquets—the lay Lords at eight and the Episcopal Bench at half-past six. A debate as late as nine o'clock is only to be got out of them by such a persistent, not to say dogged, hereditary legislator as Earl Grey, who seized the House perforce for the purpose of elaborating his renegade opinions of reaction and stemming of democrcay. But the picturesque feature of their Lordships' week was the appearance of Earl Cowley to defend himself in person against the galvanised attacks of Lord Normanby, whose mission seems to be to peck at his predecessors in the two embassies which he himself has filled. The first thing that strikes one in looking at Lord Cowley is that he is the impersonation of a quiet English gentleman. The slight, moderately tall, but well-proportioned, figure; the composure of countenance, verging on perennial gravity; the easy simplicity of manner, and the plainness and quietude of dress mark him as peculiarly a representative Englishman. You detect none of the outward signs of brilliancy, but there is every indication of good sense, coupled with an air of resolution, which struck us as satisfactory signs of the qualities of a diplomatist who is placed just now in a position of great responsibility. As regards his speech, looking at it as a Parliamentary display, it was simply nothing. Considering his delivery, the thought at once occurred that he had very assiduously cultivated that axiom of the diplomatic art which was laid down by a master of the craft, that language was intended as a means of concealing your ideas. Nevertheless, as you listened to him, you every now and then found that he was saying exactly the right thing in the fewest and plainest words, and the cheers that every now and then followed one of his unadorned sentences, and which at the close of his speech broke out from all sides of the House, showed that he had not come over from France specially without having effected his object. Altogether, it seemed to us that he showed clearly that, however he had been foiled in his efforts against the annexation of Savoy, he had never been really deceived in that matter. If the impression which he made on many, and, we think, most of his auditors in the House of Lords the other night, could be reproduced accurately, which is impossible, on the public mind, we will venture to say that there would be no lack of confidence in Lord Cowley as the guardian of English interests in France.

Glancing memoriter over the salient points of the proceedings of the Commons in the last few days, the first idea is connected with the speech of Mr. Haliburton, whom men love to honour under the denomination of "Sam Slick." If any notion that this gentleman has anything of the Yankee about him personally has been founded on his singular appreciation of the Yankee idiosyncrasy, the most momentary look at him will dissipate that fancy at once. His appearance is eminently suggestive of that type of our countrymen which is figured in the designation of the old English gentleman: he has that portliness of person, ruddiness of complexion, and richness of voice which is associated with port (very wrongly in his case, we believe) and country air. He has that aplomb in the delivery of his opinions so purely Conservative which is characteristic of a Tory pur sang; while in his matter, although the quality of the keen humorist pervades all he says, his humour is underlaid by strong good sense, knowledge of what he is talking about, and a turn of argumentation which his legal habits have no doubt rendered very subtle and skilful. Except for a tinge of personal bitterness against Mr. Gladstone, arising out of a keen encounter of wits between him and Mr. Haliburton, which neither of them seems inclined to forget, his speech was well worth listening to. As a physical effort it was remarkable, for he spoke for an hour and a half, at a very late hour in the evening; and it may be mentioned that, although bearing no marks of age about him inconsistent with his actual years, he is by no means strong on his feet, and when he left the House afterwards we were sorry to observe that he was as nearly lame as possible, so much more so than usual as to indicate a proximate fit of gout.

Holding still to Parliamentary personalities, by no means in the offensive sense of the word, we may be permitted to state an opinion that Mr. Horsman has at last worked out the vein of undiluted acid which he has devoted to the French Emperor. We will be responsible for the assertion that the feeling of the House in reference to his interposition of another of his Napoleonics the other evening was evident; it was felt to be clumsily and inopportunely introduced; and as an oration, though bearing unusual marks of preparation, and that is saying a great deal, it fell particularly flat, on an unsympathising and unappreciative audience. To be sure, there was no novelty whatever in the argument, and the illustrations were decidedly of the heavy-heroic order, while the flavour of bitter with which the speech was tinged as a whole was far less artistically than usual made palatable by the pungency of the other components. There were not effervescence and brightness enough to give the draught that quality which makes it temporarily acceptable. Lord John Russell seemed for the nonce to have recovered some of his whilom Parliamentary farseeing, and, catching the temper of the House, was dignified in his small way, and rebuked in his most grandiloquent manner. In these Savoy and France discussions Mr. Kinglake's efforts to obtain prominency have been scant successful. Somehow he wants what, in the absence of a better term to express our meaning, we may call mellowness in his style. He is so dry in voice and manner that his oratory can be compared to nothing that we can think of but to the cracking of sticks; and what he actually produces is so little commensurate with the importance of his demeanour, and he has so unadroitly allowed the ground to be constantly cut from under his feet from time to time by the Government in regard to the cause which he has espoused, that he has lost any hold on the House, small as it was, which he had ever obtained. On the whole, it may be predicted that the member for Bridgewater may be placed by the side of the member for Stroud, as having expended his political and Parliamentary capital for the present, probably for this Session. To be sure they only adventured with hundreds when many thousands were necessary; so the result is not surprising.

It may, perhaps, be remembered that the nuisance of bringing forward all sorts of discussions on Fridays on the motion for the adjournment of the House to Monday has resulted in an alteration which makes Thursday the working day which Friday used to be. The effect of the change was very palpable on the first occasion of its coming into operation. A thin gathering of members was the first sign, and an obvious diminution of the number of subjects set down for discussion was the second. The most notable circumstance certainly was the introduction again of the event of the day which is so significantly designated "the fight." There was a laughing air of incredulity about all the benches (except, perhaps, in those places which are occupied by those stern Dissenters and teetotallers who are a kind of ludicrous pre-Raphaelite reproduction of the Puritans of old) at Mr. William Ewart's pseudo-solemn denunciations of the affair, in which we may be excused if we fancied the honourable gentleman himself shared to a great degree. As to Mr. Vincent Scully's intensely combative manner of denouncing a fight (probably because it was only one with fists), and claiming exemption for Ireland from such exhibitions of savagery, of course it produced the roars of laughter which it is the habit, and we believe the pleasure, of that exceedingly humorous gentleman to produce. The calls for a defender of the gallant participators in this modern tournament in the person of an honourable member whom report most accurately, as is believed, states to have been not only present at the contest but to have displayed an enthusiasm there which in another sphere—say a bloody battle between two regular armies each a hundred thousand strong—would have been eminently consistent with his poetic temperament, proved that the House as a body was thoroughly imbued with that spirit in reference to this event which seems so strangely to have pervaded the national feeling. There was inimitable grave comedy in the way in which Sir George Lewis enunciated an opinion, which he stated to be a received one, that the rules of the ring tended to create a system of fair fighting in earnest, which was preferable to the use of the stiletto, the bowie knife, and for the especial benefit of the member for Cork county, of the shillelagh. Indeed, one could not but fancy that the Home Secretary wished it to be implied that he was, on the whole, rather of that opinion himself.

Turning from men to measures, a word or two touching the Reform Bill. Is it a matter of regret that that scheme of legislation continues to get more and more into a ludicrous position? No regret, however, will alter the fact. Nothing could be more absurd than the appearance of things when, in a very thin and languid House, Mr. Edwin James rose to resume the debate. The lapse of time since the adjournment had been so great that when he began to refer to the speech of Mr. Whiteside, with which the former debate closed, nobody seemed to understand the allusion or the point of his argument. The effect was like that of the waking of the characters in the fairy tale of "The Sleeping Beauty," after their slumber of a hundred years, or, better still, like the sounds which issued from Sir John Mandeville's horn when a frost which had seized on its interior had yielded to a thaw. Beyond this the tone adopted by the extreme Liberals, of whom the member for Marylebone and Mr. Henry Berkeley may be taken as types, more than justified the bantering manner in which their speeches were received by the Opposition, and (we are putting the very strongest possible case) almost inclined one to bear with temper the grimaces of a member for one of the eastern counties, whose and untiring cultivation of the art of insult, not only towards Ministers but to the leaders of his own party, has given him a doubtful notoriety and a questionable prominence as the very Thersites of the Conservative body in Parliament. It is to be feared, too, that Lord Palmerston is rather indulgent to the spirit in which the House treats the Reform Bill. He himself, whenever he deals with the question of the adjournment of the debate, seems to look at the matter from a comic point of view, and certainly makes no strenuous efforts to force discussion on half-laughing members. It may also be mentioned as a significant fact that at no time this Session have the Ministerial benches been so desolate and deserted as on those occasions when the Bill for the Amendment of the Representation of the People has been the subject-matter of debate.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO SAVOY.

The Marquis of NORMANBY moved as follows:—"That it appears by the papers recently laid before Parliament, and especially by a despatch from Earl Cowley to Lord John Russell, dated February 5, that the French Minister had stated, and truly, that the intention of the Emperor of the French to take possession of Savoy under certain contingencies had been made to her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and by him communicated to her Majesty's Secretary of State on more than one occasion, between July 12, 1859, and January 25, 1860, in private letters; that, while this House fully recognises the necessity of a private correspondence between the Secretary of State and her Majesty's representatives abroad, it is of opinion that all facts of international importance ought to be made the matter of official correspondence, and as such to remain on record for the use, not only of the Government of the day, but of their successors in office, to be produced to or withheld from Parliament by the Ministers of the Crown on their responsibility; that the absence of any such record, more especially if such private correspondence is referred to in public despatches, is injurious to the public service, unjust alike to the Foreign Minister who made the communication and to official colleagues at home, and calculated to withhold important matters from the full and free control of Parliament." In submitting this resolution, the noble Marquis said he did not wish to reopen the general question of the affairs of Italy, nor the particular question of the annexation of Savoy. Nor did he wish or intend to impute any blame to, or reflect any censure upon, Lord Cowley; but only to condemn, and if possible put an end to, a system which he felt to be highly injurious to the public service.

Earl COWLEY (who was understood to have come from Paris purposely to defend his character) explained that prior to the 12th of July last he was officially informed that there was no intention of annexing Savoy on the part of France; and that the communications made to him in August by Count Walewski were private and unofficial, consequently he treated of them at first only in his private letters, but the subsequent course of events rendered it necessary that he should refer to them in his public despatches to the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs; and although that was somewhat irregular, he believed he was fully justified, under the circumstances, in departing from the ordinary course of procedure. The noble Earl was much cheered on both sides of the House when he resumed his seat.

Earl GRANVILLE, after the clear explanation of the noble Earl, and looking to the fact that no Peer has risen to make any observations, thought he should only take the proper course in moving the previous question.

The Earl of MALMESBURY admitted that no blame attached to Lord Cowley, but the fault was in Lord John Russell for not asking the noble Earl to put the extracts from his private letters into an official form. It was quite at the discretion of the Secretary of State to convert private letters into official ones.

After some remarks from Lord Wodehouse and the Marquis of Normanby in reply, the previous question was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE REFORM BILL.

In answer to Mr. B. Osborne, Mr. MASSEY said he should abandon his motion for referring the Reform Bill to a Select Committee.

The adjourned debate on the Reform Bill, which has been so long in abeyance, was resumed by

Mr. E. JAMES—He urged that if, as was asserted on the opposite side, the measure was one of a revolutionary character, it ought to have been met by a direct negative. He pointed out that Mr. Whiteside, Sir Bulwer Lytton, and other members of the late Government, had taken credit to themselves for extending the franchise to the working classes, whom they now denounced as unworthy of it. He thought the bill was defective on account of its non-disfranchisement, in not varying the constituency, by insisting on the payment of rates as a condition of the franchise; and by its not containing provision for a better system of registration and revision. He urged and quoted statistics to show that the returns on which the Government had founded their idea of the extension of the franchise under the bill were erroneous, and the number would far exceed their calculations; and, although he did not object to the extension, it was right that the House should know the fact. In the metropolitan boroughs alone the increase of voters would be 109,000, instead of 13,000, as was calculated, under the bill. He urged that there should have been a greater disfranchisement of small constituencies, and showed by examples that taking population as a basis for disfranchisement caused great irregularities in the representation when the number of electors was considered. He contended for a lodger franchise, and altogether he urged that Lord John Russell's bill of 1854 was far preferable to that now proposed.

Mr. HARDY at some length criticised the bill, which he contended was simply accepted by the extreme party, which was represented by Mr. Bright, as a step by means of which further democratic changes might be obtained; that a £6 franchise would create a Parliament at once as corrupt and inefficient as experience had shown that municipal bodies which were elected by electors holding a low franchise were likely to become. Its main object was, in fact, to give representation to mere numbers as opposed to property and intelligence, and thus to create an undue preponderance in our representative system of one portion of the community over another.

Sir G. C. LEWIS contended for the accuracy of the returns on which the Government had founded its calculation of the increase of the constituency proposed by the bill, which assertion he supported by copious reference to statistics. The principle of the bill, which was intended to amend some of the defects of the bill of 1832, was extending the suffrage to the working classes, to give to the nation the strength of a united people, the best safeguard against foreign aggression. The bill was on the whole a moderate, a safe, and a precautionary measure, and he was unable to reconcile the objections which were taken to it, which went to show that it was likely to be at once dangerous and revolutionary, and abortive and inoperative. As to our improved system of registration, that would be provided for by a separate bill; while as regarded other details of this measure, they were such as might well be dealt with in Committee. He urged that disfranchisement had gone far enough; while the redistribution of seats was founded on very careful consideration and deliberation. As this was a moment peculiarly fitted for the settlement of a question like this he trusted that the bill would be the object of a fair contest, and that no attempt would be made to defeat it by impediments for the purpose of mere delay. Though the Committee would not come on before Whitsuntide, the 9th of June might well be given up to that stage, and it might be sent up to the Lords in sufficient time for its ample consideration by that House.

Lord R. MONTAGU having spoken against the bill, and indeed against all Parliamentary reform,

Mr. H. BERKELEY expressed his surprise that such bitter speeches should be made against the bill without any specific motion following as the result. He himself thought the bill had no claim to the title of a reform bill, in the common acceptation of the term. It was as a measure of advance that he gave it his support, protesting against its possessing the finality of even twenty-five years. He took it as he would a homœopathic globule, believing that it would do neither harm nor good; for though it extended the franchise, it neither gave the protection of the ballot nor dealt with nomination boroughs.

Lord R. Cecil, Mr. M. Milnes, Mr. Peacocke, and Mr. Thompson having severally addressed the House, on the motion of Mr. Black, the debate was adjourned to Thursday.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Paper Duty Repeal Bill, as amended, was considered, and ordered to be read a third time this day.

The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill went through Committee pro formâ.

The Registration of Births (Scotland) Bill was read a second time, as was also the Fisheries (Scotland) Bill.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Marriages (England and Ireland) Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a Select Committee.

LAW AND EQUITY BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR moved the second reading of this bill, the object of which was to enable courts, both of common law and equity, to decide all issues arising out of proceedings properly taken in either, without the necessity of a reference from the courts of equity to the courts of common law, or from courts of common law to courts of equity, as the case might be. He did not wish their Lordships to accept the measure without due consideration, and therefore asked them to assent to its second reading, with the view of afterwards referring it to a Select Committee.

Lord ST. LEONARDS opposed the motion, contending that the bill was the mere echo of the report of the equity commissioners, who knew nothing about common law, while the common law judges knew nothing about equity. Such an arrangement as that proposed could not work satisfactorily, and he could not therefore sanction it even so far as to vote for the second reading of the bill.

Lord CRANWORTH admitted that there might be some difficulties in dealing with a question of such magnitude, but, as he approved of the principle of the bill, he should support its second reading.

After some remarks from Lord Chelmsford and Lord Wensleydale, who spoke unfavourably of the measure,

The bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Mr. GREGORY moved for a Select Committe "To inquire how far and in what what way it may be desirable to find increased space for the extension and arrangement of the various collections of the British Museum, and the best means of rendering them available for the promotion of science and art." In support of this motion he referred to the way in which valuable contributions to the museum are thrown aside or crowded incongruously together, owing to want of space for their proper display; and asserted that every new presentation only threw the great national institution into a still more hopeless state of congestion. At the same time he deprecated the removal of the natural history department to the Kensington Museum—a step which would be exceedingly unpopular in the metropolis generally, and especially so at the East-end.

After some remarks from Mr. KINNAIRD,

Sir G. C. LEWIS intimated his assent to the motion, and his conviction that a removal of a part of the collection at the British Museum to another place would be attended with great advantages, inasmuch as the site of that museum could not be materially enlarged without a considerable expenditure of public money. He would not, however, say where the new site should be—whether east or west—as that was a part of the question which might very fairly be inquired into by the Committee.

Mr. TURNER protested against the removal of the collection to Kensington, where the first cost of a new building would amount to about £600,000, while the ultimate expense was a mere matter of guesswork. The British Museum might be sufficiently enlarged much more cheaply, and the loss and inconvenience which must necessarily attend a distant removal would thereby be avoided.

Colonel SYKES was opposed to a removal of the natural history department from the British Museum, but in favour of the formation of other museums from its superabundance.

Lord PALMERSTON detailed the reasons upon which the trustees had decided that, as the British Museum could not properly accommodate all its contents, the books and antiquities ought to remain there, and the natural history collection be removed to another site; at the same time agreeing in the propriety of appointing the Select Committee, who might inquire fully into the entire question of accommodating the collections, and making them instrumental to the popular instruction, either on their present or some other site, at a moderate expenditure of the public money.

After a few words from Mr. JACKSON, the motion was agreed to.

DOCKYARDS.

Mr. JACKSON moved "That an humble address be presented her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to issue a Royal Commission to inquire into the system of control and management of her Majesty's dockyards, the purchase of materials and stores, the cost of building, repairing, altering, fitting and refitting her Majesty's ships."

Mr. KINNAIRD seconded the motion.

Mr. CORRY would not oppose the motion, although he thought that, after the inquiry made by a Select Committee last year, no good could result from the appointment of a Commission.

Mr. BENTINCK traced the evils of dockyard management to the constitution of the Board of Admiralty, and could anticipate no good from an inquiry which stopped short of that question.

Mr. LINDSAY supported the motion in the hope that the Commission would probe to the bottom the charges of mismanagement which had been made by the late Commission, and denied by the dockyard authorities. He also asked that the Committee should be empowered to inquire into the best mode of keeping the dockyard accounts, so that a clear statement might be annually submitted to Parliament, and enable it to come to a correct conclusion as to the expenditure, and to ascertain whether or not the nation received value for its money. In conclusion he moved, as an amendment, to add the words, "and the best means of keeping the accounts thereof."

Lord C. PAGET said the subject of naval expenditure had of late been so much discussed by the public that no better course could be taken than to refer the question for inquiry to an independent body such as the Commission now demanded. He should not, therefore, oppose the motion; nor did he object to the addition proposed in the amendment, since, under the present system of keeping the accounts, it was absolutely impossible for the Admiralty to furnish a statement as to the exact cost of any particular ship.

Mr. JACKSON having intimated his acceptance of the addition proposed by Mr. Lindsay,

The motion, so amended, was agreed to.

LONDON CORPORATION BILL.

On the order of the day for the second reading of this bill,

Mr. AYRTON said he had given notice of the following amendment, "That it should be committed to a Select Committee, with instruction to inquire into and report upon the charges and taxes on the metropolis, and the expediency of constituting the metropolis a county of itself, for all purposes of local management, and for the administration of justice." The hon. member contended that the City Corporation was a petty municipality altogether unworthy of the metropolis; and, referring to the Metropolitan Board of Works in terms of the highest praise, as being a useful and laborious body, he insisted that it would be much better to utilise and extend it than to endeavour to resuscitate an old and worn-out corporation, that had nothing better to do than to ape the House of Commons, without care for the interests of those who were supposed to be their constituents. He proposed to constitute a really effective metropolitan municipality, consisting of aldermen and common councilmen elected by the districts now represented on the Board of Works; but the variety of details which such a scheme embraced he left for future examination and discussion. He understood, however, that he could not put his amendment until the bill had been read a second time; but he hoped the Home Secretary would intimate his willingness that the bill should be referred to a Select Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS said there was nothing in the bill which could really tend to a reform of the Corporation. The plan sketched out by Mr. Ayrton was that which ought to be adopted, and, if the House desired it, no difficulty would be experienced in constituting a real metropolitan municipality. Of several bills introduced of late years with a similar object the present was the worst, for it hardly contained a single one of the changes which had been recommended by the Commission. He characterised the administration of the City as being the most extravagant, corrupt, and wasteful of any Government that ever existed, municipal or national; and complained that the bill (which, however, he did not intend to oppose) contained no provisions calculated to check this profuse and unnecessary expenditure.

Sir G. C. LEWIS said the Commissioners, in their report in 1854, had recommended that no attempt should be made to reconstitute the City Corporation as a municipality for the whole metropolis, but no doubt their report contained other recommendations which were not contained in the bill before the House. The reason of that, however, was that the bill, when originally introduced, did embody many of those recommendations; but that by a decision of that House it was referred to a Select Committee, where it took its present form. He hoped the House would agree to pass it as it stood; but if after its second reading Mr. Ayrton submitted his motion, he would certainly oppose it, as he saw no benefit that could arise from making the metropolis a county in itself.

Mr. J. LOCKE moved the adjournment of the debate.

After some conversation the House divided, and negatived this motion by 83 to 57.

MR. RUPPELL then moved the adjournment of the House.

Ultimately, however, the bill was read a second time, with an understanding that Mr. Ayrton should bring forward his amendments on the motion for going into Committee, at which time, which was fixed for that day fortnight.

FORESHORES.

MR. A. SMITH moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the rights of the Crown as connected with the foreshores, tidal rivers, estuaries, and bed of the sea around the coasts of the United Kingdom, and those matters in which the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are dealing with the same.

The Attorney-General opposed the motion, on the ground that it was founded upon imperfect information, and that the Foreshores Act, were much more applicable to the Scotch than to the English law in force, and that the House had no power to inquire into the rights of the Crown, which represented the public.

On a division, the motion was negatived by 134 to 117.

THE LAW OF ATTORNEYS.

In reply to Mr. Howes, Sir G. C. LEWIS said he was not aware that the Government could give the Honourable Gentleman information as to the effect which the reduced franchise would have in increasing the constituencies than that could be obtained from the returns presented, and which had been compiled from the rate-books.

Colonel Sykes obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law respecting the liability of mariners with regard to property committed to their care, and to regulate the pilotage of the Humber.

The Pawnbrokers Act Amendment Bill passed through Committee.

The Tramways Bill was read a second time.

The Public Improvements Bill, the Municipal Corporations (Limitations of Actions) Bill, and the Petition of Right Bill were read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

MR. E. JAMES gave notice that, on going into Committee on the Reform Bill, he would move the insertion of a clause providing for a lodger franchise.

The Law of Property Bill passed through Committee.

The Traders and Operatives Bill was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a Select Committee.

The Jews Act Amendment Bill passed through Committee, and was ordered to be read a third time.

The Pawnbrokers Act Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Police and Towns Improvement (Scotland) Act Amendment Bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

UNION OF BENEFICES BILL.—The Bishop of LONDON moved the second reading of this bill, the object of which was to remove those churches in the city of London where there were no congregations, and to consolidate the parishes so as to have churches established in places more convenient for residents and attendance. He did not think that the bill would interfere with various clauses of the bill, for the purpose of showing that it was different in its provisions, language, and machinery. He stated that the bill which he introduced last year was very much simplified as those proposed by the bill.—After some discussion the bill was read a second time.

The DIOCESE AND PARISH BILL passed through Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE DISTURBANCES IN SICILY.—Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply to Mr. H. B. Sheridan, said no complaints had reached the Government of the ill-treatment of British subjects in the kingdom of Naples, and he believed the disturbances in Sicily were confined to the Liberal representative and the British men-of-war on that station. Directions had recently been given to British ships-of-war not to visit the harbours of Palermo, another at Messina, and a third at Naples; and instructions had been sent to be given similar directions to the ships-of-war on the coast for the protection of the British flag. He had received no information that could lead to the supposition that the Neapolitan troops had been employed to aid in preventing the Sicilians obtaining a better form of government.

THE REFORM BILL.

The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Representation of the People Bill was resumed by Mr. BLACKBURN who opposed the measure on the ground that it would place the working classes in a position to override the intelligence and wealth of the country. He deeply regretted being compelled to oppose a Government which he had always deemed the friend of the State; but he felt that he could not, in justice to his own feelings, vote for a measure which would be a source of danger to those who were prepared to receive it.

Sir E. B. LYTTON said he thought it might not be possible to agree upon some broad principle upon which the elective system could be based; but he thought that the House might, at present, confine itself to the consideration of the question whether the time had arrived for dealing with the subject. He was of opinion that this was an age of progress. Progress, however, could not be made unless we were prepared to make changes when they seemed and the opposite of rich. For his own part, if he thought the constitution would be relied, he would be a more conservative Minister than ours which would establish some security for the fair representation of intelligence and of property. If they were to deal satisfactorily with this House, it would be better to get rid of all the inconvenience above, instead of having complicated rules as to the qualification which would remove the defects of the preceding one. It seemed to him that if they were to pass the bill in the present they would add to a great degree to the settlement of the question. It would double the expense of the county elections, and open the door to unnecessary corruption. It would complicate and please nobody. In fact, it would place the destinies of the country upon a basis which would be more destroyed, than preserved, and be restored to their original greatness. Having replied to many of the arguments used by Mr. Bright, he might have proved that the Government acted at which the change was likely to take place, and entitled the control of the people of France. He asked whether this was a movement to disarm a Parliament which in a difficult crisis had done so much to preserve the peace of Europe? He was not unwilling to maintain the rights of the country, in order to exchange it for another to be selected by the numerous body of the people. The right hon. Baronet concluded by a brilliant and effective speech by urging the noble Lord to withdraw his bill, which was calculated to do infinite mischief to the country.

Mr. MUNDY and Sir James Ferguson severally spoke in opposition to the measure.

Mr. DENMAN gave his cordial support to the bill, believing that the spread of education and increase of the comforts and means of the working classes fully competent to exercise the franchise in a proper manner. He regretted, however, that the measure of the hon. Member for Calne was so limited, and was prepared to support a closer to effect that object whenever it was submitted to the House.

Mr. LOCKE said that his objection to the bill was that it was not conceded that the 40 franchise proposed to be given to boroughs would almost secure the return of working men, as there were very few boroughs, even those of agricultural labourers, that did not let for 40 a year and upwards. He only hoped that when the measure was passed it would be erroneous. He therefore recommended the noble Lord to withdraw it for the present, and to refer it to the Committee appointed by the House last Session to inquire into the subject. It was his conviction that if this bill were passed it would be impossible for Bristol, Hull, and Liverpool to return two members for Parliament.

Lord J. RUSSELL contended that the changes that had taken place both in the electoral and social condition of the population of the country of the Reform Bill of 1832 were an ample justification for the present measure. He ridiculed the assertion of the opponents of the bill, that it would render the democratic element so strong in that House as to place in peril the aristocratic element in it. He defended the bill from the charge of its statistical returns which had been so often attacked during the debate, and showed that they were compiled to create a wide distinction between the number of 40 houses in a borough and the number of electors which would be created by a 40 franchise, and so keep it from falling into the hands of the lowest and least educated classes. He taunted the members on the Opposition benches with a desire of refusing the franchise to the working classes, and warned them of the consequences of such a declaration. The noble Lord concluded by a high panegyric on the value of the moral bearing, the patient resignation, and the contended disposition of the working classes, and by a peroration which concluded by calling upon the House to strengthen the institutions of the kingdom by assenting to a measure which would add much to their security as a basis for the representation of the country.—The debate was then adjourned until Monday.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH AND SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—In a recent letter received from Colonel R. G. MACRAE, of Auburn, Western Australia, when forwarding his second subscription to the statue about to be erected in Dublin to Oliver Goldsmith, the following interesting passage occurs:—"I believe I am now the senior, and most probably the oldest, of the little kinsmen of the poet, being within a few weeks of eighty. I was deeply interested upon reading in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS the generous proposal of his Excellency the Earl of Carlisle, accompanied by his Lordship's munificent donation, to set on foot the desired object. To me it is an interesting circumstance that the 'Vicar of Wakefield' should have been the only book, save a Bible, found amongst the relics of the unfortunate Sir John Franklin amidst the icebergs where so many brave hearts so miserably perished."

MUSIC.

Mdlle. Rose Csillag, who appeared for the first time in this country at the Royal Italian Opera on Thursday last week, in the character of Leonora in Beethoven's "Fidelio," made a greater impression on that part than any one has done since the illustrious Schroder Devrient, whose mantle may be said to have fallen upon her shoulders. Csillag, whose name in her native land is spelt Czillag, signifies "Star," is indeed a star of the first magnitude. As an actress she resembles Schroder Devrient, and is equal to her. She resembles her in earnest simplicity of manner, and the absence of the artificial conventionalities of the stage—in those delicate touches of nature and truth which make her more than a mere histrionic presents, and in that force and truth in the expression of passion which irresistibly commands the sympathy of the audience. In her musical aspect she excels her great predecessor—her beauty is of a more perfect order, and her voice is of a more extended compass than she possessed. As a singer, moreover, she is a most accomplished artist, and her style is that of the German School. With all these qualities it may well be supposed that a performance of "Fidelio" is indeed we have rarely witnessed a more enthusiastic reception. Hitherto it has not been the fashion to pay other part than to admire, we learn, is extensive and varied. Her next character, we believe, will be Donna Anna, and this will afford a test by which in this country is not understood or appreciated, and is consequently always subjected to a second-rate performance. Such mistake, which is not committed in Germany. As a whole, Beethoven's beautiful opera was well performed, though Neri-Baraldi was too weak and tame for the part of Florestan. Zelger gave a fine reading of the character of the kind-hearted gaoler; and the parts of Marcellina was pleasingly acted and sung by Mdlle. Corbari. The orchestra was superb, and the concerted pieces and choruses were admirably rung.

At the same theatre Grisi and Mario made their first appearance for the season on Tuesday evening in "La Favorita." Grisi's engagements in Italy have left her voice, after which, it is well known, it is wont to fall. Mario, perhaps this may depend on her success during her engagement, and it is to be hoped that the applause which in her reception on Tuesday was enthusiastic in the extreme. On her entrance she was vehemently applauded for several minutes, and on rewhich audience, she in her principal scenes was received similar marks of admiration. She is not changed in any respect since last year. She displays her graceful dignity and grace, her rich and mellow voice, and that simple tenderness of manner which makes her representation of the part of Leonora one of the most beautiful and affecting things we have on the opera stage. Mario, too, has undergone no change since last year, and retains his fine falling off in the warmth of his reception. His acting was as fine as ever, and the tones of his voice had that melting tenderness which has always been one of his characteristics. He was several times give way in passages of force and energy.

On Thursday, at the Royal Italian Theatre, a new opera, entitled "Almina," by Signor Campana, was performed for the first time. Of this opera and its performance we shall give some account next week.

The Philharmonic Society, on Monday last, began its fortyeighth season with a concert which was attended by a crowded audience who were present, that its vitality was as strong as at any period of its existence. To a musical reader the programme of a musical entertainment is often as interesting as the character from the fullest description, and therefore we give the programme of the concert on Monday last:—

PART I.

Sinfonia, "The Seasons" Op. 143	Spohr.
Aria, Mentr' accendermi infiamo," Signor Belletti ("Il Barbiere")	Mozart.
Concerto, Violin, Herr Joachim	Mendelssohn.

PART II.

Sinfonia (C Minor)	Mozart.
Duetto, "Se la vita," Mdlle. Louise Michel and Signor Belletti	Rossini.
Concerto, Violoncello	Servais.
Overture "Oberon"	Weber.

Conductor—Professor Sterndale Bennett, Mus. Doc.

Spohr's symphony, "The Seasons," though it is the latest orchestral work we have from the pen of the author, is somewhat surprising that this was the first time of its performance at a philharmonic concert. It is full of the beauties of the composer's best beauties; and, as a whole, is not unworthy of the illustrious master's pen. Mozart's charming aria, "Mentr' accendermi infiamo," had the great advantage the powers of the unrivalled Philharmonic orchestra; the two overtures, each of them a masterpiece of its author, were also executed with the greatest precision. Mendelssohn's concerto showed that he is a violin at of the very best kind. Mdlle. Louise Michel is a contralto singer, and a pupil of Madame Viardot, whom she resembles a good deal in power and quality of her voice. She is at Mozart's magnificent scena from "Der Freischütz" was what was most successful. Signor Belletti stands in no need of eulogy—his execution of Mozart's fine air from "The Seraglio" was a masterpiece of vocalism.

The third concert of the Musical Society of London on Wednesday evening was one of the most thoroughly enjoyable of a society of such high pretensions. As we have done with regard to the Philharmonic, we shall enable our musical readers to judge of its quality by giving the programme:—

PART I.

Overture ("The Isles of Fingal")	F. Mendelssohn.

THE THEATRES, &c.

ST. JAMES'S.—A new piece was produced on Wednesday, entitled "A Friend in Need." It is written by Messrs. French and Lovell, and is from the pen of the latter. Harry Sackville, a fashionable fop, who turns out to be the good genius of the piece. An apparently respectable person, Mr. Bedford (Mr. Robson), has secret vices—drink, gambling, night thoughts, and loss his money and other people's. Charles Hastings, his ward (Mr. Robson), is about to be married to his daughter, Miss Mortimer, and the guilty father hopes to square accounts by matrimonial arrangements, but is disappointed by the lover's refusal to become accessory to a scapegrace, one Cuthbert Leslie (Mr. Spencer). Sparkley at this juncture, soon understands the point, and proposes to personate the young fellow's creditor, who is, indeed, a base person, and inspires her with a sincere sentiment in favour of Hastings. He then benevolently tempts the father into a game of cards, and contrives to lose a considerable sum of money to him, so that the old gentleman is able to discharge the liabilities of his ward. Mr. Bedford merits great praise for his easy and gentlemanly bearing; and the part of the piece was admirably enacted, including the part of the erratic squire by Mr. Charles Young, who has to bring down the curtain with a long story he is unable to finish. This expedient is not new, but it is effectively managed. The little drama is, altogether, meritorious, and, we rejoice to add, successful.

OLYMPIC.—A light piece, adapted from the French ("Le Dindon ces Mère"), was produced on Monday, under the title of "A Christmas Dinner." English names are given to the original characters, and Fay Hodgkinson (Mrs. Stirling) is the heroine. The poor actress has no relative to invite her to a Christmas dinner, none to invite to her own, and she is subdued by the desolate feeling of her solitude; when the artist, William Hogarth (Horace Wigan), brings to her the portrait of her mother, and, as that mother's substitute, she spends the day Christmas dinner. Mrs. Stirling thoroughly entered into the sentiment of this pathetic incident, which was doubtless felt in its full force by the audience, though they were not vehemently demonstrative.

STRAND.—The little theatre has become famous for the production of scarp pieces that remind one of a storm in a teacup. Such is the nature of a dramatic trifle, entitled "A Race for a Widow," written by Mr. T. J. Williams. It all turns upon one lady assuming the name of another: in fact, upon Mrs. Pepperpot (Miss Lister), calling herself Mrs. Wilmington (Miss Sutton). She thus passes for a person of fortune, and is believed to be such by Mr. Adolphus De Cremorne (Mr. H. J. Turner) and Mr. Cornelius Popjoy (Mr. J. Rogers). It seems that Mrs. Pepperpot has left Mrs. Wilmington travel in company to Wales, and are followed by the two interested parties, who direct their attentions as Pepperpot, for Wilmington, to the annoyance of her husband (Mr. J. Bland), whose jealousy furnishes the usual amusement. The three gentlemen, indeed, violently quarrel, and cross the matrimonial course. Ultimately, of course, the mistake is discovered; but without advantage to the lover of the lady who has been already and bloodily married. The playwright has shown some ingenuity in keeping his secret to the last, and the performers, including the excellent Mrs. Selby as Mrs. Tarrow, Rogers, and Bland credit also is due for the vigour with which they throw themselves into the fun, and fill with which they indicated character. The piece was thoroughly successful.

SADLER'S WELLS.—This theatre was opened on Monday for the benefit of Mr. Rivers, when "Venice Preserved" was performed, the part of Jaffier being undertaken by the gentleman just named, that of Pierre being undertaken by Mr. Melton. The part of Belvidera was sustained by Miss Edith Heraud with a vigour and pathos which commanded the applause and drew forth the tears of the audience.

CAMPDEN-HILL PRIVATE THEATRICALS.—An amateur performance for the benefit of the Kensington Cricket Club took place last Monday, and was highly successful. The first piece of the evening was the farce of Miss Gertrude Addison, a pupil of Mrs. Stirling. This young lady possesses many requisites for the stage, and will form a valuable acquisition to the regular boards.

FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENT.—On Monday morning a serious accident occurred to the Hadley train on the Great Northern line from London. The train, in passing through the station, broke in two, and some of the carriages were left on the line, through the breaking of the tires and carriages remained on the line, the hinder portion of the train ran into it. One of the carriages was smashed to pieces, and Brigden, who was riding in this carriage, was so seriously injured that he died shortly after the accident. The Magistrates, under the Act of Parliament lately passed for suppression of bathing in streets and thoroughfares, have charged with being found in the houses of Aaron Worsley, licensed victualler, Thames-street. Worsley, it appears, has been in the habit of supplying beds and taking money, but he said the landlord had nothing to do with them: he was engaged in the business on his own behalf. He was fined a heavy sum £10; but he gave notice of appeal, and entered into the required securities. The other persons were discharged till Friday next.

After a launch a select company sumptuously entertained by the directors of the City of Dublin, and Mr. Laird occupied the chair.—On Monday afternoon the launch of the screw steamer Cardenes, belonging to the Union Steam Navigation Company, of Southampton, and intended as a mail-ship between that port and the Cape of Good Hope, took place from the shipbuilding-yard of Mr. C. Lungley, and will afford excellent accommodation for passengers.—Last Saturday the Commodore, the first of four mail express steam-ships for the Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Navigation Company, was launched from the building yard of Messrs. Palmer and Co., at Jarrow. We intend giving next week an engraving of the launch and a description of this noble vessel.

RIFFIAN NUPTIAL DANCE IN TANGIER.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

BURMESE PROCESSION-MUSIC.

THE musical taste of the Burmese contrasts strongly with that of the natives of Hindostan, for, whilst the latter is characterised by ear-piercing shrillness and deafening fortissimo, the effect of the former is soft, plaintive, and melodious; indeed, Burmese music is by no means unpleasant to a European ear, and the mode of its employment in processions, as shown in our Illustration, is at once novel and ingenious.

These people seem to share with Western nations—in a larger degree than is usually observable amongst Orientals—the romantic associations which music inspires; and so, in prosecuting his suit with his coy enamorata, the Burmese has a just sense of the power of music, regarding it as an indispensable aid to the possession of the heart of his lady-love. Throughout a calm moonlight night the song of the serenader may be unceasingly heard on the calm waters of the Martaban River, as from his light canoe he sends his plaintive love ditty on its soft mission; and, as the response from the home of his beloved, in still more plaintive, tender tones, falls upon the ear of the stranger, the effect is decidedly favourable to the opinion that the Burmese have a due appreciation of the power and sentiment of music.

RIFFIAN NUPTIAL DANCE.

We have given in previous Numbers some account of the Riffs, and have illustrated a few of their singular customs. Our present impression contains the representation of a Riffian Nuptial Dance in Tangier, strikingly illustrative of the savage nature of this wild and warlike people. The gentleman to whom we are indebted for the sketch from which it was taken has kindly supplied us with the following descriptive details:—"We had just been inspecting the old Moorish citadel (as far as we were allowed to do so) which stands upon a precipitous rock of commanding elevation above the bay over which we were looking, and thinking of the narrow escape we had the day before, when we and our little felucca were so nearly sent to the bottom by a fearful gust of wind, which suddenly swept down upon us from over the Barbary mountains, striking our mainsail, before half down, and rolling our little craft of some thirty tons on her beam ends. While we were looking over the bay, crested with foam, thinking on what, fortunately, was not our fate, our attention was drawn to a peculiar sound of evidently a sort of platoon firing, which caused a considerable amount of interest in our minds, as Mr. Hay, the British Consul, had just told us we must not venture a mile outside Tangier without a Moorish soldier, as both guide and guard, or ourselves might be shot down. Again we heard the firing, but clearly nearer, and, turning with some unpleasant qualms to Achmed, we asked what it was or meant. In reply to our question Achmet said, "Oh, sar, not fear; de Riffians dance and shoot de marriage dance; dey dance here directly for de priest; priest got von wife von two day gone; de Riffs bring fatt calf and dance. Dat priest's house, pointing to a white building with a great top before us. When the fat calf appear'd, however, it was a small and not overfat young ox they were about to present to the bride and bridegroom. The dancers now made their appearance, issuing out of Tangier, consisting of twenty or thirty Riffians, yealing round and round in a circle, when a singular commotion took place, and the firing followed. There were several repetitions of this sort while they were clearing the valley between us. At last they arrived opposite the priest's house, as seen in the Sketch before us, "de fatt calf" being led behind. Now the dance commenced under our eyes, and a very extraordinary scene it formed. One of the Riffians, who seemed to be of a somewhat superior grade, stood in the centre whirling his gun rapidly round in his hands above his head the others dancing in a circle round him with great vigour and velocity, when suddenly, at a shout from the man in the centre, the dancers leaped into the air, and in that position fired into the ground, when they stopped to reload, pouring the powder by guess as to quantity into the palm of their hand, as customary in Morocco, from a small horn hung at the girdle, in doing which they sometimes make a mistake, as in the young Riffian to the left of the Sketch, who was about to join the dancers, but knowing his gun was loaded with ball took the precaution to discharge it against a wall, when, to his astonishment and chagrin, his gun burst, without, however, any further mischief. In the mean time the dancing and firing party went whirling on till they had either completed the ceremony or had tired themselves out, when "de fatt calf" was presented, and led into a yard surrounding the priest's house; but whether he nor his dunky bride showed themselves or acknowledged the honour done them.

Our correspondent says, in conclusion, that till he had visited Morocco he had an impression that the Moors were rather small, dark, wiry men; but, to his surprise, he found a tall, powerful, athletic race, with great breadth of shoulder and muscular limbs and all strikingly handsome.

STREET MUSIC IN BURMAH.

A FELLAH WEDDING.

THE Fellahs, or Aissaries, are a people now scattered over the whole width and breadth of the Ottoman empire, though originally they were a fierce and independent race, inhabiting the impregnable strongholds amongst that mountainous district which extends, with little interruption, from the Taurus to the foot of the Lebanon. Even to the day there exists a nucleus of the original fierce Aissaries, who dwell in fastnesses amongst the mountains between Antioch and Tripoli, and who mainly subsist by brigandage, making frequent and unexpected swoops down amongst the surrounding towns and villages, and carrying off everything they can lay their hands upon. Cattle, poultry, provisions of all kinds, jewellery, and money: all is fish that comes to their nets. Neither in these foraging exploits are they very particular, should opposition be offered, as to the means they employ for the attainment of booty—severing women's heads, arms, and ankles for the easier possession of the coins which the native ladies disport round their heads, and of anklets and bracelets of value.

They are said to be descendants of the ancient Assassins who infested the hilly country about Beyrout years ago; and to the present day they set at defiance the local authorities, submitting neither to their yoke nor taxation; and the local government, on their part, from the peculiar nature of the country these Aissaries dwell in, deem it wisest to leave them alone, and so save useless sacrifice of money, time, and life in hunting them from one stronghold to another where their fastnesses may be reckoned by hundreds.

FELLAH MARRIAGE PROCESSION IN LATAKIA.

Woe betide them, however, if in any pillaging foray they fall into the hands of the Ottoman troops; they have then no mercy to expect. Of the Fellah faith or creed nothing is known: it remains as profound a secret as Freemasonry or the Druse religion, and not even their own women are allowed to get the smallest insight into the mysteries of their doctrines. Thus much for the Fellahs of the mountains. Now for those who have settled in the plains, towns, and villages, and who may be called the civilised portion of this people.

The Fellahs of the plain may be said, with very few exceptions, to be divided into two large classes, the agricultural and the pastoral, the latter inhabiting those parts of Southern Palestine and Asia Minor where the absence of cultivation and the aridity of the soil render it only available for the pasturage of large flocks of goats, who pick up a precarious subsistence in parts where, as far as the human eye can discern, not one blade of grass can be seen in summer-time. The flesh of their goats and kids is often the only meat obtainable at the towns and villages scattered over these districts, whilst the milk is eagerly sought after, and in cold weather affords a delicious cream, known in those parts as kaimap, a most delightful relish to the traveller's breakfast-table. The skins of the goats themselves constitute a staple commodity of trade, being properly tanned and formed into those sacks which are invariably used by caravans for carrying their supply of water.

The agricultural class of Fellahs find ready employment in all the grain-growing districts (especially in Egypt), and are invaluable to the landed proprietors of the cheftliks, or mulberry plantations, which flourish so luxuriantly between Sidon and the Valley of the Orontes. They are a hard-working, robust, and cheerful people, despite the heavy yoke they are under, and which grinds them down to a state of positive serfdom. In the cheftliks alluded to the trees and the silkworm eggs are allotted amongst a dozen or more Fellahs, with one of their own men for a chief or sheik over them. This proprietor interferes in nothing. The land is ploughed, the trees nurtured, the silkworms reared, and the cocoons reeled into silk by these Fellahs, each one of whom has a khook, or peculiarly-constructed ventilating cottage, allotted him for the rearing of the silkworms, in addition to a hut for the habitation of himself and family, with the privilege of growing as many vegetables as he likes in the spaces intervening between the mulberry plants. One-third of the silk produced is the share of the Fellah; and the sheik who has the largest portion of ground has an additional allowance of wheat, barley, &c., and is allowed, moreover, a horse and donkey. The sheik is generally an old man with a large family, who, intermarrying, make several cheftliks, to consist of one family, and constitute a clanship. It was from one of these cheftliks that the subject of the accompanying sketch was taken.

Mr. B——, for many years British Consul-General in Egypt, was married in early life to an Aleppine lady, who being a subject of the Sultan was entitled to purchase as much ground as she thought fit. For forty years Mr. B—— was proprietor of a very extensive mulberry plantation at Suediah, on the borders of the Gulf of Antioch, and close to where the Orontes discharges itself into the ocean. During these forty years old Ali Nesli had been his sheik, and in that interval had become the father of a prodigious family of sons and daughters. All these had grown up, married, and settled, except his two youngest daughters, and it was on the occasion of the marriage of the elder of these that the marriage procession took place which is here illustrated. A more patriarchal-looking old man than Ali Nesli it is impossible to conceive, and his dark, keen black eyes positively danced with joy as he led the wedding procession—the partner of all his joys and troubles on one side of him, the only remaining girl on the other, and immediately followed by the deeply-veiled bride, who rode on one of Mr. B——'s best Arab mares, which was elegantly caparisoned. Close around the bride were the women of the cheftlick, and many of those from neighbouring ones. Following these, and bringing up the rear, were all the young men who could boast the possession of a crazy old matchlock or a rusty cavalry pistol, and from these, to the imminent risk of themselves and their neighbours, they fired incessant volleys as a feu-de-joie in honour of the occasion. Many aged crones also kept up an unearthly "Wallah! wallah! wallah!" chorus; and very grand amongst these, and drowning all other noises in its clamour—was the band—the vile musicians, who, with discordant fife and squealing clarinets, with durbekirs or drums, that never paused an instant, continued hammer and tongs at the same tune during the day and through the night.

But the grand climax to this wild and uncouth set-out was yet to come. When the benevolent old host and hostess had handsomely tipped the bride, and a huge demijon of real good brandy was distributed amongst the people (they had been drinking freely already)—when old Ali Nesli had imbibed somewhere about a pint of raw spirits, and his heart was overflowing with joy and gratitude,—then, making a private signal to the musicians, he flung one arm round his wife's neck, and the other round his daughter's, and, despite vile old yellow boots, iron-heeled and iron-tipped, worn by men and women alike—boots that must have weighed near half a hundredweight—they performed with extraordinary agility an uncouth kind of war-dance, in which many of the followers joined amidst the din and smoke of firearms, and the yelled encomiums of the vile and worthless old crones before alluded to, who kept up a witch-like chorus to the dance.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Rear-Admiral Sir Henry B. Martin has taken up his appointment as Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean fleet.

The members of the St. George's Rifle Corps gave a dinner to their commanding officer, Colonel Lindsay, on Monday, at Willis's Rooms.

We are sorry to learn (says the Army and Navy Gazette) that the state of health of Major-General Sir John Inglis, K.C.B., will compel him to resign his divisional command at Bangalore, and return home.

Saturday, the 5th of May, will be a grand day for volunteers if present intentions are carried out, the commanders of all metropolitan corps having arranged for a review in Hyde Park on that day.

We learn from the Shrewsbury Journal that it is in contemplation to erect a monument in Shrewsbury to the memory of the members of the gallant 53rd who fell during the outbreaks in India.

Another disturbance of a mutinous character is said to have taken place on Thursday se'nnight on board her Majesty's ship Edgar, at Spithead. A number of marines, usually so remarkable for their unswerving discipline, were, it is stated, the rioters on this occasion.

The electric telegraph has been applied to targets for rifle-shooting. The targets are made in distinct pieces. When a segment is struck by a bullet the motion is conveyed to an electric battery with wires running to galvanometers beside the party firing. The inventor is a Lieutenant Chevalier, of Leasowe.

A grand banquet to the 78th Highlanders took place on Tuesday in the Edinburgh Corn Exchange. The great hall was most effectively decorated, and some 1400 persons, including the entertainers and their gallant guests, surrounded the tables. The Lord Provost presided; and among those present were Viscount Melville; Sir J. Douglas, K.C.B.; Vice-Admiral Hope Johnstone, Colonel Ewart, Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton, Sir James Baird, &c. The proceedings were of a very enthusiastic character.

Lieutenant-General Home Home died during the night of Saturday last very suddenly. The gallant officer was apparently in perfect health in the evening of that day, but was found dead in his bed on Sunday morning. General Home formerly served in the Guards, and was within the last few months appointed to the Colonelcy of the 66th Regiment.——We regret to announce the death, a few days ago, of Lieutenant-General Fleming, who had been in the Army since 1802.

OUR GUN-BOATS.—The Times makes an astounding statement with respect to the condition of our boasted fleet of gun-boats. It will be remembered that, at the close of the Russian war, the greater number of these vessels were hauled up at Haslar Yard, which was specially formed for their accommodation. It soon became apparent that extensive repairs were necessary, and, by great exertion, twenty-two boats have been rendered fit for service. Nine others are now in the shipwrights' hands, and it is asserted that every one of them "bears the marks of having been constructed with the most reckless disregard to quality of material." But, according to this account, defective as are those which have been carefully stored beneath the Haslar sheds, the vessels which have been kept afloat are in a much more deplorable condition. Two of these, which have been hauled up, are signalled out by the Times by way of illustration; and, certainly, if the details given are correct, there is good reason for the conclusion arrived at by the leading journal that "the whole of our gun-boats afloat are totally unfit for service."

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

ALTHOUGH there has been a fair demand for discount accommodation, the rates of money in Lombard-street have ruled somewhat easier; and, owing to the favourable nature of the exchanges on the Continent, as well as at New York, together with most of our bullion imports having gone direct into the Bank of England, the impression has become somewhat general that the quotations have seen their highest range. Much, of course, will depend upon the extent of our shipments to France and the East; but, as yet, there are no indications of a severe drain upon our stocks of gold. Short first-class commercial bills have been done at 4½; three months', at 4½ to 4¾; four months', at 4¾ to 5; and six months', at 5¼ to 5½ per cent. At those rates the large discount-houses are now seeking for paper of an undoubted character.

The all-engrossing topic of conversation has been the discovery of a series of gigantic frauds on the part of the chief cashier of the Union Bank of London. These frauds, perpetrated by means of a forged pass-book of the account kept at the Bank of England, have been carried on for several years, until at length they amount to no less a sum than £263,000. In order to cover this loss the directors propose to write off £2 per share, or £120,000, from the capital, and to appropriate £100,000 of the reserve fund, together with £40,000 of profits. By so doing the next dividend will be 5 per cent, making, with the 7½ per cent already paid, 12½ per cent for the whole year. The committee of the Stock Exchange have commenced a strict investigation in reference to statements made to the effect that the defalcations in question have arisen from time bargains in various stocks.

The imports of bullion from all sources have been about £250,000. No gold has been withdrawn from the Bank of England for export. The shipments to the East by the present packet are £129,465.

The returns of the Board of Trade, showing the extent of our exports in March, show a falling off of £919,758, or 8 per cent, as compared with the corresponding month last year.

The total draughts of the Indian Government upon India from the 9th of January to the 25th inst. represented only £248 5s. 2d.

The dealings in the shares of the new undertakings have been somewhat limited. Ocean Marine Insurance have realised 2⅝ to 2⅞; Universal Marine, ¾ to 1 prem.; and London and Provincial Marine, ¼ to ⅝ prem.

The imports of bullion during the first quarter of the present year were £5,984,424; the exports, £6,784,651.

A dividend of £2 per share, free of income tax, has been declared by the Royal West India Steam Packet Company.

Throughout the week the market for Home Securities has been remarkably steady as to price, but the business doing in it has been somewhat restricted. On Monday the dealings were much restricted:—Bank Stock sold at 225; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents marked 93⅛ ¼; Consols, 94⅜ ⅞ ⅝ ½; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 78¼; Long Annuities, 1885, 17 15-16; India Five per Cents, 106⅜ ⅛ 106; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅞; Ditto, 1859, 97⅛; Ditto, Bonds, 5s dis.; Exchequer Bills, 6s. to 10s. prem.; Consols for Account, 94⅜ ⅞; India Four per Cent Rupee Paper was 85¼; Ditto, Five per Cent, 98¼ ½; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103⅞. On Tuesday very few fluctuations took place in the quotations:—Bank Stock left off at 225½; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93⅛ ¼; Consols, both for Money and Time, 94⅜ ¾; Long Annuities, 1885, 17⅝; India Five per Cents, 106; Ditto, Five per Cent Paper, 98¼; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅞; Ditto, 1859, 96⅞; Ditto, Bonds, 5s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 6s. to 10s. prem. The transactions on the following day were unimportant, yet prices ruled steady:—Bank Stock was 205 to 206; India Five per Cent Enfaced Paper, 98½ 98; Exchequer Bills realised 5s. to 10s. prem.; India Bonds, 5s. dis.; and Long Annuities, 17¼ ⅝. The market was steady on Thursday, and prices were a shade higher:—Consols, for Money, were done at 94⅜ ⅞; for the Account, 94⅞ 95; the Reduced New Three per Cents sold at 93½ ⅜; India Bonds 10s. to 8s. dis.; and Exchequer Bills, 6s. prem. India Loan was 106¼; and the Five-and-a-Half Rupee Paper, 103⅞ 104.

Bank of England	£20,717,800
Private Banks	3,376,819
Joint-stock Banks	2,946,330
Scotland	4,001,977
Ireland	7,204,472
Total	£38,247,388

Compared with the corresponding period in 1859, the above figures show an increase in the circulation of £791,426. The stocks of specie in the Scotch banks amount to £2,624,584; in the Irish to £2,746,601.

In the foreign house the tendency of prices has been downwards; nevertheless, the changes in them, compared with last week, have been unimportant. The amount of business transacted has been limited, and the following are the leading quotations for the week:—Brazilian Five per Cents, 99¾ ex div.; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 91; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 85⅞; Ditto Deferred, 24½; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 85½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66; Dutch Four per Cents, 100⅝ ex div.; Grenada New Active, Three-and-a-Half per Cents, 15½; Mexican Three per Cents, 21½; Portuguese Three per Cents, 44; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 97; Russian Three per Cents, 65½; Sardinian Five per Cents, 84½; Spanish Three per Cents, 47½; Ditto, New Deferred, 36¼; Ditto, Committee's Certificates of Coupon, not funded, 4¾; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 76⅞ ex div.; Ditto, New, 61½; Turkish Four per Cents, 101½; Venezuela Three per Cents, 26½.

Joint-stock Bank Shares have been only in moderate request, yet prices, almost generally, have been supported. Agra and United Service have marked 76; Australasia, 73; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 20½; Bank of London, 52; City, 72½; Commercial of London, 20; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 17½; London Chartered of Australia, 23½; London and County, 36½; London and Westminster, 58½; Oriental, 44¾; Ottoman, 18; and Union of Australia, 46½. The shares of the Union Bank of London have sold as low as 26, and are now quoted at only 23.

In Colonial Government Securities rather a limited business has been done:—Canada Six per Cents, January and July, have realised 114; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1888 and upwards, 100; Nova Scotia Sterling Debentures, 108; and Victoria Six per Cent Bonds, 105¾.

The Miscellaneous Market has been far from active:—Australian Agricultural have been done at 32½; Crystal Palace, 29¾; Ditto, Six per Cent Perpetual Debentures, 104; Ditto, Preference, 99; Electric Telegraph, 105; Ditto, New, 15½; English and Australian Copper, 2¾; General Steam, 26; London Discount, 4; London General Omnibus, 1½; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 4; National Discount, 4½; North British Australasian, ⅞; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 80; Ditto New, 34; Royal Mail Steam, 53; Scottish Australian Investment, 127½; South Australian Land, 35½; Birmingham Canal, 94½; Regent's, 20; Chelsea Waterworks, 15½; East London, 125½; West Middlesex, 106.

The dealings in the Railway Share Market have been very moderate. Prices have somewhat fluctuated, but the actual fall in them has been comparatively trifling. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, April 23.—Our market to-day was very moderately supplied with English wheat. For most kinds there was a steady, but by no means active, demand, at last week's improvement in value. In foreign wheat—the show of which was moderate—the transactions were limited; nevertheless, the quotations were well supported. Floating cargoes of grain were firm in price. There was a fair inquiry for barley, both English and foreign, at extreme rates. Malt, however, moved off slowly, on former terms. Oats were quite as dear as last week, although the importations from abroad were liberal. In the value of beans and peas no change took place. Flour changed hands slowly, on former terms. The nominal top price of English was 48s. per 280 lb.

April 25.—For nearly all kinds of produce there was a fair inquiry here to-day, at quite Monday's currency. The supplies generally were rather limited.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 4?s. to 54s.; ditto, white, 45s. to 59s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s. to 51s.; rye, 30s. to 31s.; grinding barley, 28s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 31s. to 3?s.; malting ditto, 36s. to 4?s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 50s. to 70s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 56s. to 70s.; Chevalier, 70s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s. to 26s.; potato ditto, 27s. to 30s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 21s. to 26s.; ditto, white, 22s. to 28s.; tick beans, 34s. to 35s.; grey peas, 33s. to 35s.; maple, 37s. to 38s.; white, 38s. to 39s.; boilers, 38s. to 40s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 43s. to 46s.; town households, 40s. to 41s.; country marks, 34s. to 36s. per 280 lb.; American, 25s. to 29s. per barrel; French, 32s. to 40s. per sack.

Seeds.—Clover seed is in improved request, and rather dearer. Most other seeds command full quotations. Cakes continue steady.

Linseed, English, crushing, 54s. to 58s.; Calcutta, 49s. to 49s. 6d.; hempseed, 38s. to 40s. per quarter; coriander, 14s. to 18s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 14s.; ditto, white, 11s. to 14s.; tares, 7s. to 7s. 6d. per bushel. English rapeseed, 62s. to 66s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £9 10s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 0s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 41s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover seed, 38s. to 52s.; white ditto, 84s. to 9?s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d. to 8d.; of household ditto, 5½d. to 7d. per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 49s. 6d.; barley, 37s. 6d.; oats, 24s. 2d.; rye, 32s. 11d.; beans, 4? s.; peas, 39s. 2d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 47s. 3d.; barley, 35s. 11d.; oats, 23s. 9d.; rye, 34s. 2d.; beans, 40s. 1d.; peas, 38s. 3d.

Tea.—The latest advices state that the shipments from China amounted to 69,000,000 lbs. Our market has become somewhat firmer. In prices, however, no change has taken place.

Sugar.—Good and fine raw qualities have changed hands steadily at fully last week's quotations; but low and damp parcels are very inactive, at the late decline in value. Refined goods are in moderate request, at 51s. to 51s. 6d. for common brown lumps. Crushed and pieces support previous rates.

Coffee.—Rather large parcels have been on offer; yet the demand has continued in a healthy state, at full currencies.

Rice.—Importers are very firm, but no further improvement has taken place in the quotations.

Provisions.—Most descriptions of butter are selling slowly, but at very full prices, owing to the limited supplies on offer. The bacon market is firm, at the late improvement in the quotations. Hams and lard continue steady.

Tallow.—The market is flat, and prices are a shade lower. P.Y.C., on the spot, has sold at 56s., and for delivery during the last three months, 51s. 9d. to 52s. per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is rather dearer—28s. 3d. per cwt. having been paid on the spot. All other oils support previous rates; but the demand for them is by no means active. Spirits of turpentine, 35s. to 36s.; rough, 9s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—All kinds of rum are a dull inquiry. Proof Leewards has sold at 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d.; proof East India, 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d. per gallon. Brandy is heavy, at barely late rates. Corn spirits support former terms.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s. to £5 0s.; clover ditto, £4 0s. to £5 17s. 6d.; and straw, £1 7s. to £1 14s. per load. Trade firm.

Coals.—Best house coals, 21s. 9d. to 22s.; seconds, 19s. 6d. to 2?s. 6d.; and manufacturers', 13s. 6d. to 18s. 6d. per ton.

Hops.—Weald of Kent and Sussex pockets, of last year's growth, are in fair request, at full quotations. All other kinds of hops move off slowly, on former terms.

Wool.—Owing to the high value of money in the discount market, and the approaching public sales, the wool trade is heavy, and prices rule a shade lower.

Potatoes.—Moderate supplies continue on sale, coastwise and by land-carriage. The demand is steady, and prices vary from 80s. to 160s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, April 26).—Only a moderate supply of beasts was on offer in our market to-day. Prime Scots and crosses were in steady request, at fully Monday's currency; but other breeds moved off slowly, on former terms. The show of sheep was by no means extensive. There was a free sale for Downs and half-breeds, at extreme rates. Otherwise, the mutton trade was in a sluggish state. Lambs—which came slowly to hand—were inactive, except as regards the best breeds, at Monday's quotations. There was a moderate inquiry for calves, at previous rates. Pigs and milch cows were steady in price. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 4d. to 3s. 6d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 6d.; prime Scots, &c., 4s. 8d. to 4s. 10d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 0d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 8d. to 6s. 0d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 2d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 10d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; lambs, 5s. 6d. to 7s. 0d.; suckling calves, 19s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 23s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 800; cows, 140; sheep and lambs, 6525; calves, 270; pigs, 340. Foreign: Beasts, 70; sheep, 412; calves, 157.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies are moderate, and the trade rules steady, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 0d. to 4s. 4d.; mutton, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 0d.; lamb, 5s. 0d. to 6s. 4d.; veal, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 4d.; pork, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 0d. per 8lb by the carcase. ROBERT HERBERT.

SERVICE OF PLATE PRESENTED TO REAR-ADMIRAL SIR MICHAEL SEYMOUR, K.C.B. BY BRITISH MERCHANTS IN CHINA.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

CAPTURE OF A LARGE SLAVE-SHIP BY H.M.S. "PLUTO."—SEE NEXT PAGE.

TESTIMONIAL TO SIR MICHAEL SEYMOUR.

The British merchants and other representatives of British trade in China resolved, on the 16th of March, 1859, to present Sir Michael Seymour, the Rear-Admiral commanding in chief in the East India and China Seas, with a testimonial which should mark their sense of his worth and ability, and the success which accompanied those qualities during the period of great difficulty in which he held command. Two thousand guineas were for this purpose remitted to England, and the choice of a testimonial and of the artist-manufacturer was placed in Sir Michael's own hands. The result we have engraved. A magnificent testimonial was designed by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, embodying in its design a memorial of its presentation, and consisting of a centre ornament for flowers, two candelabra of seven lights each, two of five lights, four dessert-stands, two soup-tureens, corner covers, sauce-boats, &c. The principal pieces only are those which we have engraved.

The centre ornament consists of a shaft arising from a circular base, with projecting pedestals on which is introduced the Chinese dragon. Four panels on the base exhibit views of Canton, Pekin, Victoria, and Hong-Kong, the fourth tablet containing the inscription. The ornament of the shaft and basket may be said to have been localised as much as possible, plants indigenous to the country having been introduced—the tea plant, mulberry, and sweet orange. The basket is made to remove, so that, should it be so wished, it can be used as a tazza.

Around the shaft four figures, very gracefully modeled, are grouped; these depict the Empire of China, Great Britain, Commerce, and Navigation, the latter accompanied by symbols of naval supremacy. The smaller candelabra, as well as those of seven lights, are designed to accompany the centre, and the same ornamentation has been freely employed. Around the bases of the latter the Dragon of China is entwined, and these are further decorated by the amorial bearings of Sir Michael Seymour and of Great Britain; the further decorations consist of Chinese plants, &c. The smaller candelabra are the same, with the omission of the dragon. The dessert-stands and the remainder of the service are of the same character. Mr. Thomas Brown, of Messrs. Hunt and Roskell's establishment, designed the whole. The weight of the service presented exceeds two thousand five hundred ounces, the cost of which was two thousand guineas.

CAPTURE OF A SLAVE-SHIP.

The accompanying Sketch represents H.M.S. Pluto, Lieut.-Commander C. H. Simpson, capturing a large barque on the coast of Africa, with 874 slaves on board, on the morning of the 30th of November last, in lat. 4·15 S., long. 9·30 E., being the largest number of slaves ever taken in one vessel. The Pluto sighted the barque at daylight, about six or eight miles distant, with every possible sail set, and observed her alter her course in order to escape; but, as the Pluto was under banked fires, steam was soon got up, and in about an hour and a half she was alongside her prize. On seeing the naval officers look down the main-hatch the liberated slaves sent up a most hearty cheer, which can never be forgotten by those who heard it.

MELBOURNE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The capital of the British colony of Victoria contains many public buildings of importance, not the least interesting of which is its Public Library. The centre part of this building, erected at a cost of about £16,000, consisting of an entrance hall, with a reading-room above, fifty feet by fifty feet, and thirty-two feet high, was opened by his Excellency Major-General Macarthur, on the 11th of February, 1856. The library then contained only 3846 volumes, and the hours of admission were from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. It was not until the end of May that the arrangements for lighting the building with gas were finished; the hours of admission were then extended from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. The number of visitors during the broken period of that year was 23,769. During the ensuing year, 1857, the number increased to 49,226, and as considerable additions had been made to the collection of books, and as a desire for a further extension of the hours of admission was manifested by the public, it was opened on the 1st of January, 1858, from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. The enlargement of the hours of admittance caused a considerable augmentation in the number of visitors, as in the year 1858 the number was 77,925. During the first three months of last year the number was 21,259, giving for three years and two months a total of 172,179. The number of books at present on the shelves is about 25,000, including 100 rare and costly volumes presented by the Emperor of the French.

A new room in connection with this institution was opened on May 24, last year, by Sir Henry Barkly, Governor-in-Chief of the colony of Victoria, on which occasion his Excellency spoke as follows:—"I attend here with much pleasure, at the request of the trustees, to open formally the new reading-room. In listening to the interesting details which have just been communicated of the progress of the Melbourne Public Library, it is impossible not to be struck with astonishment as well as gratification. When I recollect that at the time of my arrival this institution was in the first year of its existence, it cannot but surprise me to be informed that it already contains a collection of books rivalling in number and in value those of many long-established provincial libraries in Europe. I have little doubt that the trustees will be enabled, ere long, by the liberality of the Legislature, to place it in the very first rank of public libraries, and to render it altogether worthy of this wealthy metropolis. Though an advocate for economy in financial affairs I sincerely trust that the last vote on the estimates to be curtailed will ever be that for the extension and completion of so noble a work; for in what way can the people's money be so well expended for the improvement and for the amusement of the people of Victoria? That the public appreciate the advantages they can here enjoy is clearly shown in the address just read; the great fact in which, to my mind, is, not that the trustees expect soon to have 25,000 volumes on their shelves, but that, in spite of the limited accommodation they could hitherto offer to readers, nearly 80,000 visits were recorded last year. I am glad to hear it will be in the power of the trustees to afford henceforth increased facilities for study, and also to establish a system under which some of the benefits of the library may be enjoyed by those resident in our country towns. I rejoice, too, to know that steps have been already taken to commence the formation of a gallery of art in the lower story of the wing just finished. We hear much nowadays of 'The People's Palace' in the mother country—splendid structure, no doubt, erected by capitalists as a commercial speculation; but when the arrangements to which I have alluded are carried out, and this entire building, which promises to do much credit to its architect, is completed, it may, I think, with truth be averred that the people of Victoria have a palace of their own. I now declare this reading-room to be opened for the use of the public, conferring upon it in honour of her Majesty's birthday, which we to-day commemorate, the name of the Queen's reading-room."

MAJOR-GENERAL JAMES RAMSAY.

This gallant officer entered the Indian Army in 1825 as an Addiscombe cadet. He was appointed to the Commissariat Department in 1830, and as Commissary-General in 1852. Prior to this date the Commissariat Department had been administered by the Military Board at Calcutta, but on the abolition of that body the Government resolved to commit the sole control and direction of the department to Major Ramsay. Ever zealous in the discharge of his own duties, he commanded the respect and confidence of his superiors, while he was held in esteem by those under him. Of the efficiency of the Bengal Commissariat there is but one opinion, and during the late disastrous times, when every other branch of the administration was cut off or paralysed, the Commissariat Department stood alone, and weathered the storm most triumphantly, providing for the numerous troops pouring into the country, and maintaining them under every variety of circumstance and difficulty, to the entire satisfaction of the military authorities. This speaks strongly in favour of the vigorous administration of the department, as well as for the hearty zeal and devotion of the officers under their equally zealous and devoted chief.

Major-General J. Ramsay has just had presented to him by the officers of his department a testimonial, consisting of six groups in solid silver. The subject of each is different, and all are illustrative of India. We find represented the native soldiers, Bedouins, Hindoos, Bengalese, and other tribes; the banana, palm, bamboo, and cocoanut trees, together with the following animals: the elephant, tiger, nil ghau or native antelope, Brahmin bull, Arab horses, and camel. The groups are all spirited, and have been modeled from nature. The group of Arab horses was modeled by order, with some alteration, from the piece of plate presented by his Imperial Majesty Napoleon III. to the Junior United Service Club. The value of this testimonial, we are informed, is 500 guineas. Some of these pieces of plate bear the following inscription:—"This silver dessert service, consisting of six groups, was presented to Major-General James Ramsay, Commissary-General of the Bengal Army, by the officers of the department, on his relinquishing office, as a token of esteem and regard, and to mark the high sense they entertain of his abilities and noble exertions while serving as their chief, by which the Commissariat has attained its universally-acknowledged state of efficiency." This work has been manufactured by C. Williams and Co. (late Catchpole and Williams), Oxford-street, who are making two other testimonials of considerable value for the same General.

THE ABBE HUC.

This gentle and gifted missionary, and indefatigable and indomitable traveller, whose writings upon the Chinese empire have far exceeded all similar works in interest, correctness, and popularity, has just died in the midst of his laborious and useful career. He was, when seized with his last fatal illness, supplying the Gazette de France with papers on the literature and religion of China, in the form of letters to a literary man at Nankin. Monsieur Huc was born at Toulouse, the 1st of August, 1813, and, after passing through a clerical education and probation, became a member of the Missionary Society known as the Congregation of St. Lazarus. His first mission to China was in 1839. His second mission thither, and to Tartary and Thibet, in 1844, established his fame. This wonderful and daring expedition he undertook for the purpose of ascertaining the nature and extent of those distant regions, which the Papal authority had formed into the Apostolic Vicariate of Mongolia. He went in company with a brother missionary, the late Abbé Gabet. They passed over the steppes of Tartary to Thibet. The missionaries were accompanied by a young Lama priest, and they themselves assumed the sacerdotal dress of the Lamas, which they found an effectual safeguard against violence and insult. To qualify himself for making known the Gospel-message to the Thibetans, the Abbé Huc took up his residence for some months in the celebrated Buddhist Monastery of Kounboun, and among other knowledge acquired the language of the people. Thus prepared, he and his companion joined the caravan which carried the yearly tribute to the Emperor of China, and accompanied it as far as Lhassa, the capital of Thibet. On taking up their residence there they were subjected to a strict examination by the authorities; but when they declared simply that their object in coming was to instruct the people in the religion of Christ they were not only tolerated, but lodged at the Viceroy's expense. The Chinese Minister, however, was not so tolerant. He ordered them to quit the place instantly, and was not content that they should go to Calcutta, but obliged them to retrace their steps, and again to traverse the steppes of Tartary and to pass through China. In October, 1846, they reached Macao. On his return to France, the Abbé, encouraged by the advice of Sir John Davis and the approval of Lord Palmerston, published his adventures in a book entitled "Recollections of a Journey in Tartary, Thibet, and China." The book had immense success, and was translated into almost every language of Europe. One edition of it, profusely illustrated, was published at the office of this Journal. The Abbé's next work, published in 1854, by order of the Emperor, having been printed at the Imperial printing-press, was "The Chinese Empire;" this was also translated into English and other languages. The interest and success of his books unabating, the Abbé brought out, in 1857, another work in three volumes, entitled "Christianity in China, Tartary, and Thibet." In this able production the question of the propagation of the faith in the East is fully discussed, and the Abbé comes to the conclusion that the philosophy of Confucius, the traditions of Buddha, the legends of the Vedas, and the dogmas of Mohammed are all destined shortly to wane before the Gospel of Christ. The Abbé Huc's books have been crowned by the French Academy.

ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS.

(To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.)

An article in your Journal last week contained the following remarks:—"A bill for a questionable 'improvement' of the legal profession has advanced a stage. Its educational provisions are excellent; but it proposes to give increased advantages and power to a class thought to have already quite enough of both. A provision for admitting persons to practice who have not been articled seems, on the other hand, very unfair to those who are compelled to pay a tremendous stamp-duty and a heavy premium, in addition to going through a long course of probation, and who are supposed to be taken from the classes in which we look for a high sense of honour as well as professional shrewdness." With reference to this extract I ask permission to say a few words in explanation of the bill alluded to, and in reference to the position of persons who have not been articled, and yet seek to practice for themselves. The present bill contains no such provision as the writer and readers of your article would suppose. The nearest approach to such a provision is the 4th clause, which provides that clerks (the Law Society has procured the interpolation of the word "managing") of ten years' service may be admitted to practice after three years' further service under articles, paying the same stamp duty, and, it may be, the same premium (though the latter is a matter the Legislature has nothing to do with), as other persons; thus making their total probation thirteen years, instead of the ordinary articled clerk's five years.

A claim has, however, been advanced in several quarters on the part of "managing" clerks who have not been articled to be admitted to practice without serving under articles, but not in such a manner as to involve any "unfairness" to articled clerks, or any carelessness of the interests of the public. The boon is proposed to be confined to clerks of at least fifteen years' service in the profession, and of which the last five years shall have been as "managing" clerks. It is proposed that they shall pay the same amount in the shape of stamp duties as articled clerks, thus causing no loss to the revenue; that they shall have been at least fifteen years in the profession, and thus have gone through a long course of probation; that they shall have been at least five years "managing" clerks (or, in other words, solicitors now in everything but the name); thus providing for the interests of the public, and only allowing those who have proved themselves fit, to take advantage of the proposed remission of the present restriction.

It is important for all that these matters should be set in their right light; and when I mention that an hon. member has been requested to move clauses in Committee, with the view of doing what your article would lead your readers to suppose the bill at present does, and yet without the unfairness imputed, you will, I think, have no difficulty in giving these observations a place in your next Paper. A Managing Clerk.

Mr. Rodie Parkhurst, Chief Clerk, Secretary's Office, Mr. William Bokenham, Controller of the Circulation Department, Mr. Anthony Trollope, one of the Surveyors for Ireland, and Mr. Frank T. Scudamore, Receiver and Accountant-General, are the commissioners appointed by the Postmaster-General to inquire into the working of the Circulation Department of the General Post Office.

FINE ARTS.

NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

THE Exhibition of the New Society of Painters in Water Colours, just opened, it has remarkable for individual efforts of great magnitude and ambitious character than some in previous years, is, in our opinion, none the less gratifying on that account. Recently water colours, with the aid of body colours, have reached too closely upon the province of oils, but, in truth, only to suffer by the comparison necessarily suggested, and to make one regret the misapplication of the talent employed on them. On the present occasion, with some few exceptions, the water colourists restrict themselves within more moderate dimensions, and to a class of subjects more suitable to the vehicle employed. Landscapes, architectural views, and still-life pictures, form the principal feature in the bulk of the collection; efforts in history being few and far between. The leading members of the society show their usual power and facility in the production of works in their several classes of subject, with the exception of Mr. Cox, whose contributions are by no means felicitous than usual. On the other hand, the society has received a very important accession of strength in the names of Mr. Warren, a master of eminent qualifications and great industry, whose works have been sufficiently numerous and important to encourage us to anticipate many more from him, a little impeded exhibition of them at his studio. This artist's works, which for the most part are seasons observed in foreign travel, have remarkable success for judicious choice and variety of subject; for the distinctness and individuality of character realised; and the masterly manner of execution and high finish bestowed upon them. The "Parish Church at Eckernforde, in Holstein" (69), is altogether an extract dinary bit of architectural painting. The simplicity of the old Saxon interior, with plain stone walls, here and there adorned with the portrait of a departed worthy, whose order pew is the occasion of a slap sunshined from the roof, harmonises well with the staid decorum of the congregation, who are seated in quaint old-fashioned churches generally, and the stern gravity of the preacher in the lofty pulpit. What a contrast this little northern piece of worship presents to the noisy, irreligious character of the scene in the Church of Sainte Catherine, in Sicily (High Mass!" (291)! And what an impressive scene is that of "Prince Arthur Entertained by Sir Thomas Erpingham" (135)! Here in the deep seclusion of an inner court of the ancient manor-house, quiet with the stillness of the early morning, overgrown with flowers, a young nun sits in an easy chair, her pale face denoting the near approach of death, whilst her attendants, with the echoes and light linking rays reminiscent of the life of the outer world from which she has been pitilessly secluded. Another sister leans over her at the back of her chair, burying her face as though in sorrowing that sympathy is not to be altogether suppressed even within the sacred walls of the cloister. An interesting picture, and one that this affecting group, which is heightened by the dread calm which reigns throughout the building, and the quiet earnest demeanour of a third nun who is gathering flowers on a terrace in the background. "Venice as it Was—Patrician Family going out in a Gondola" (128) and "Venice as it Is" (109) form a striking contrast. The former gorgeous in mediæval grandeur, the latter the silent gloom of a dark canal, with distant glimpse of the Rialto, the scenery of a deserted palace. "The Hall of the Emperors at Goslar, in Germany" (245), the walls of which are hung with portraits of the old German Emperors, and representations of their mythic, Michel Wohlgemuth, master of Albert Durer, is a triumph of exact realisation, without any of the effect of service-painting.

L. Haghe's principal work is on the pretty well worn-out subject of "The Signing of the Magna Charta" (79). The scene is laid in a nice corner of a large apartment, dimly lighted by a single candle held (but screened from view) by one of the assassins, at the rest of the space being filled with shadowy furniture and figures, anywhere looking curtains, suggestive of something going on in the Prussian Chamber, where the real action and progress of the piece appears so spirited, but perhaps a little too theatrical. The various details of the picture display the highest order of finish. "The Colosseum and the Forum, Rome" (325), a picturesque composition, the inspired action of the improvisatore and the earnest attention displayed by the listeners forming a striking contrast with the shadow of the ruins of the Empire that was. "The Ghetto, or Jews' Quarter at Venice" (3), another contrasting bold picturesqueness, with a straggling group of idlers beneath a wide-spreading arch. This artist's other works are "The Lido at Venice" (4), "Fishermen of Venice" (69), and "A Drinking-fountain at Albano" (210).

H. Warren's "Good Samaritan" (94) is rather to be looked upon as a landscape with figures than as a work in which the latter concerns the story related in the long passage from Scripture quoted in the catalogue below the title. Boundary considerably, the scene is an inhospitable, rocky pass on the borders of a lake, and is bathed in purple glowing of sunset dawn, the stars still visible in the sky. The error of this picture consists in its monotony of tone and purpose-less character. "The Tower of Rose" (144) is a picture of very different order, representing a rich, mahogany-coloured Oriental beauty, seated by a lake (which reflects her figure), amidst a very luxuriant display of flowers, embroidered carpets, &c. "Lady Jane Dormer Demanded" (316) is an unpretending little affair, but with something in the idea to say more. A young girl is seated on a couch, and looking for a gate to be opened, which a mischievous young urchin guards, and will not open without the toll of a kiss. We regret to see in these varied and more ambitious efforts of minor importance in the present exhibition, evidence of a want of intention and onward progress in the leading subject, which we trust may prove only to be occasional and temporary.

E. H. Corbould restricts himself with exhibiting a single work, one of the highest pretension and considerable merit, though conventional in mode of treatment; the subject being "Ruth and Boaz" (250). The which, in white sheet, with upraised arms, and the prostrate figure of saul, are what we have seen before. The Samuel has something of life in the expression; but the drawing of the lower parts of the figure in the midst of gloom is not free from the imputation of stiffness.

Decidedly the gem of the room, however, is H. Tidey's "Queen Mab" (224)—Shelley's, not Shakespeare's—

> Will lanthe wake again,
> And give that faithful bosom joy,
> The sleepless spirit waits to catch
> Light, life, and rapture from her smile!

The conception exhibits wonderful fancy and invention, springing from a deep feeling for the poetry of the author. The picture will bear looking at and studying; but, as we shall have another opportunity of speaking of it at the length it deserves, we will not interfere with this brief mention for the present.

G. B. Campion's contributions on Woolwich common necessarily familiarises him with artillery practice, puts his experience to account in the very spirited composition "British Forces Forcing the Passage of a River under Heavy Fire" (147). Artillery, cavalry, infantry, are wending in somewhat confused disorder to the attack of the enemy, who is lodged a short distance off in the hills, whose sharpshooters have already crossed the stream, and are advancing, firing as they go. The subsiding artillery is also seen in the water, horse and man straining every exertion to force the guns up the rather steep bank of the river. Maskilyne the enemy's fire has not opened upon the assailants, and a scene of tumultuous agitation is the result. Mr. Campion does not restrict himself to military subjects; he indulges in the sentimental with "Sweet Remembrance of a wheel, mother" (112), and has also some very satisfactory seascapes and mountain scenery.

In landscape we give precedence to Mr. E. G. Warren, who commands attention with his accustomed power, his marvellous minuteness of detail, and the freshness of his greens—greener now than ever. We do not quarrel with him for his exact imitation of nature, but we could wish that he would sometimes inspect nature from a little longer distance, instead of always so closely as he does, introducing that genial medium which distances lends, and which brings all the parts of a landscape, large and small, into such charming harmony and keeping. With this mode of treatment, "A Summer's Morning in the Woods" (100), a delicious, cool retreat, with a little rustic stile nestling under the shade, would form a picture which, for quiet, suggestive beauty, would leave little to desire. "Shade" (251) is very masterly and bold in conception, but the sky is too hard and cold in very favourite manner. We also think that to give the true effect of shade. "Autumn" (348), a composition of fire and ferns, is a fair type of the specialities of the artist, and is open to many of the above qualifying remarks. "Leith Hill, from Broadmoor, Surrey" (236), has more of sentiment, more of the essence of the picturesque, in it than any of the others, and convinces us that, with a little study of the poetry of landscape, Mr. Warren might bring his remarkable powers of delineation to worthy use. This landscape represents a stagnant lake, or pool, in a shady spot, the waters of which, partly overgrown with lilies, reflect in strongly-marked lines the trees on its bank. A swallow on the wing has just skimmed the surface of the water, which is marked with a circling ripple. A little more, and this has been a picture of the highest pretensions.

Mr. W. Bennett, in his journeyings after the picturesque, evinces taste and judgment in the selection of his subjects, and a definite purpose in dealing with them. In proof of these remarks we may instance his "Loch Ness" (Glen Mora, Inverness-shire) (1), a bold mountain pass, seen under the effect of mountain clouds and through mountain breeze: "The Giants of the Forest" (73), a noble study of trees, with a rustic bridge in the middle, and a farm-yard with nine touches of light; and "View from Beaton's Loch, Loyne" (74), a picture of Highland scenery, showing that sympathy is not to be altogether suppressed even within the narrow walls of the cloister. An interesting little work, and this affecting group, which is heightened by the dread calm which reigns throughout the building, and the quiet earnest demeanour of a third nun who is gathering flowers on a terrace in the background. "Venice as it Was—Patrician Family going out in a Gondola" (128) and "Venice as it Is" (109) form a striking contrast. In landscape we give precedence to Mr. E. G. Warren, who commands attention with his accustomed power, his marvellous minuteness of detail, and the freshness of his greens—greener now than ever. We do not quarrel with him for his exact imitation of nature, but we could wish that he would sometimes inspect nature from a little longer distance, instead of always so closely as he does, introducing that genial medium which distances lends, and which brings all the parts of a landscape, large and small, into such charming harmony and keeping. With this mode of treatment, "A Summer's Morning in the Woods" (100), a delicious, cool retreat, with a little rustic stile nestling under the shade, would form a picture which, for quiet, suggestive beauty, would leave little to desire. "Shade" (251) is very masterly and bold in conception, but the sky is too hard and cold in very favourite manner. We also think that to give the true effect of shade. "Autumn" (348), a composition of fire and ferns, is a fair type of the specialities of the artist, and is open to many of the above qualifying remarks. "Leith Hill, from Broadmoor, Surrey" (236), has more of sentiment, more of the essence of the picturesque, in it than any of the others, and convinces us that, with a little study of the poetry of landscape, Mr. Warren might bring his remarkable powers of delineation to worthy use. This landscape represents a stagnant lake, or pool, in a shady spot, the waters of which, partly overgrown with lilies, reflect in strongly-marked lines the trees on its bank. A swallow on the wing has just skimmed the surface of the water, which is marked with a circling ripple. A little more, and this has been a picture of the highest pretensions.

Mr. W. Bennett, in his journeyings after the picturesque, evinces taste and judgment in the selection of his subjects, and a definite purpose in dealing with them. In proof of these remarks we may instance his "Loch Ness" (Glen Mora, Inverness-shire) (1), a bold mountain pass, seen under the effect of mountain clouds and through mountain breeze: "The Giants of the Forest" (73), a noble study of trees, with a rustic bridge in the middle, and a farm-yard with nine touches of light; and "View from Beaton's Loch, Loyne" (74), a picture of Highland scenery, showing that beauty, its broad expanse covered with venerable foliage, upon which, in the front, a few greenest lights, like fireflies, have travelled into infinite space, rejoicing in creation which has produced so much of grandeur and beauty. Mr. Bennett's Bishop Kew composed his morning and evening hymns upon this spot, and we can hardly conceive one that could be more appropriately chosen in which to breathe the inspiration of devotion.

Mr. Fahey also must be commended for the truly English character with which he deals with mountain scenery, as instanced in his genuine handling displayed in them. "Eskenesh, Connemara" (141), is a picturesque combination of rich broad expanse in the front with its bold mountain background. "The Vale of Nant-y-Glo, Cumberland, from Muncaster Terrace—Scawfell and Hardknot and other Mountains" (142), and "Ben Nevis" (143), are fine specimens. These are scenes crowned of material, realised without effort or confusion, with the true principles of light and colour. But "The Bishop's Walk, Fulham" (262), though of comparatively modest pretensions, is a work of the highest order, and is unquestionably the gem of beauty, indeed, is there within the very purlieus of Cockneydom—within sniffing distance of unsavory Thames—if we only choose to look for it? "The Bishop's Walk" is a portion of the old park, and the canal sense—than that cool, umbrageous retreat on the low bank of the river, with its overhanging trees, and the sun shining through the trees at neighbouring Putney, with its twin church towers.

Here we must break off for the present, promising ourselves an early return to this agreeable exhibition.

HOLMAN HUNT'S PICTURE OF "THE FINDING OF THE SAVIOUR IN THE TEMPLE."

After six years' labour Mr. Holman Hunt has completed his picture of "The Finding of the Saviour in the Temple," and it is now on view in his studio, in his native city, Liverpool. Mr. Holman Hunt was one of the earliest apostles of pre-Raphaelitism; and of the present work it may at least be said that it brings the virtues of that system to bear upon it in a more direct and stronger issue, than any which have preceded it from the school to which it belongs. The artist has sought in it every means of bold and defiant contravention of any hitherto accepted principle of art, both as regards the spirit and the mechanism. He has chosen to enact truth of the one, and we state enough to show that Mr. Hunt has a good deal to meet before he can hope for popular acceptance in his new position. He determined to paint a picture on that sublime passage in the life of Christ, when, at twelve years old, he first began to enter upon his duties as the regenerator of mankind by disputing with the doctors in the Temple. Both having frequently been painted as it was supposed to have existed, and of the type, features, and expression of the Child, it was necessary that the doctors as they are at this day, with their appropriate costume and other local characteristics, whether of climate, habits, manners, accounts, and other paraphernalia, and numberless accessories incidents, which could only be thoroughly ascertained on the spot, should be faithfully represented, as they have been proved to have written in this department of archæological research.

The scene laid in the Temple, and the assembly assembled in conclave in this picture are true representations of living rubbis in the very locality of the Temple, and the figures of the Saviour and the Virgin Mary, and Joseph are actual portraits, painted on the spot, of certain Jews in Jerusalem. But, setting aside all other considerations, the great merit claimed by Mr. Holman Hunt is, however that the ministers of a degenerate race, after the nation's fall, may be taken by surprise, and be unable to recognise the divine when it is yet in its pride, the admiration and marvel of the world, and the Jews a proud nation. But it does not present itself to them in the mystery of incarnate Divinity, the realisation of which to the mind's eye has always been a problem and a stumbling-block to artists in all ages, and which has been the highest efforts of their imagination and pencil—might be even presumptuous to say, the highest efforts of the conception of weak humanity, and, least of all, in any poor shock-headed Jew-boy in his teens, whose only recommendation to the consideration would be of a similar class? Then the cotton-wollen camisole, in which the Saviour is attired, may be the ordinary covering of boys of the lower class in Jerusalem, but it is presumed that it is not a sufficient ground for believing that it was the costume of young people of the higher class, such as the Saviour's parents appear to be. Arguing upon archeological and material grounds alone, Mr. Holman Hunt has made out a very fair case, and has produced a picture of the highest all, scriptural art, we assert that he is wrong; and that in this case acting up to the principles of his adoption as he has done, he has taken a false position, and has fallen from Holy Writ, inasmuch as not to bring it into contempt and ridicule.

Mr. Hunt has, in the first instance, to which Mr. Holman Hunt in his pursuit of exact material truth appears not to have paid any attention, that the Saviour was by no means a prepossessing youth the passage in scripture to which it pretends to refer? We are told (Luke, chap. ii.) that the parents of Jesus, after seeking him for three days, found him in the midst of the doctors "both hearing them in the Temple, in the very act of disputing with them; and such appears to have been the astonishment of all that heard him, that all were astonished at his understanding and answers." Does the expression of any one of the figures in this picture look like astonishment? Even the bear-eyed, parchment-cheeked nonagenarian on the left, to the "fast"-looking, middle-aged gentleman who is slipping his wine in his mouth, and the sleepy, dull-looking parson on the right—whose convictions trought to unwilling minds! Again, St. Luke describes the Saviour as increasing in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God, and man, and he has been at pains to show that he was not a prodigy. Mr. Holman Hunt has not attempted it. In his pursuit of the exact truths of type, costume, and other accessories, he has neglected the exact truth of the story he assumes to treat, and has represented the youthful Jesus standing near the right of the picture, his mother stooping forward with sorrowing countenance as if to embrace him and induce him to go away with her; and, so far from addressing her, he is looking from her with a look of scorn. The result of this arrangement, whilst it sacrifices the grander opportunities of the subject, is to produce a most unpleasant confusion. The subject with the minister expression, and the music boys behind with vacant gaze—half smile, half stare—coming to be looking on amazed at a truant son being reclaimed by his natural guardians. Such is the extent to which this impression is almost irresistibly forced upon the spectator that we almost feel that, with the addition of a few long pipes in addition to the wine already introduced, this interior of the Temple at Jerusalem might be converted into a bazaar or coffee-shop in Cairo or Constantinople, without any great effort of the imagination.

We are sorry to have to say this, but a work aiming at the highest range of art, upon which so much labour, to so much end, so much admirable work have been bestowed; but a sense of our duty to ourselves and to the public as the only critic we is our province to discuse leaves us no other alternative but silence, which might be misconstrued into the patient labour of the artist as displayed in the cunning handicraft, the marvellous exactness of finish, and, above all, the high tone of colour to be found in every part, it is impossible to pay too high a tribute of admiration. But all this having been granted, even upon technical grounds, guided by all our preconceived notions of the principles of art, the picture is not far from hostile criticism. We allude particularly to the utter neglect of that most far-reaching and beautiful of light and shade, by being scattered all over the canvas in a manner most distracting to the eye, and subversive of every idea of concentration, which is essential to the satisfactory contemplation of a picture.

TANTALLON CASTLE BY J. SYER.

We have already, in our notice of the Exhibition of the Society of British Artists, spoken at some length of this performance, which not only is one of the most important pictures in the collection, but singles itself out as distinctly in advance of the ordinary run of marine landscape as the grand poetry of Scott does of the usual level it is treated in a thoroughly congenial spirit. A frigid coldness and gloom hang over the ironbound shore; wrecks drift impeded to their destiny, who has been lured to destruction by the false beam, the cliff-pirate waves dancing, as it were, in triumph around them. On the rugged shore are numerous groups of wreckers and others employed in sending the various craft more or less imperilled by the storm or making prize of those which have struck which come ashore. The prevailing sombre hue of the picture is admirably broken by the little patches of colour thus introduced, and by occasional glimpse of light bursting through the rent clouds in the wake of the waves. There is much of the character of Backhuysen in the marine portion of this picture, with a little reminiscence, in the other parts than he generally displayed. The castle itself which overlooks this howling scene is truthfully realised in the fine lines in Scott's "Marmion":—

> His towers Tantallon vast,
> Broad, massive, high, and stretching far,
> And held impregnable in war.
> On a projecting rocky ray rose,
> And round three sides the ocean flows.
> * * * * *
> There was square keep—there turret high,
> Or pinnacles that sought the sky,
> And shafts and arches still and dacry
> The gathering ocean storm.

THE FARM.

THE old adage, "While the grass grows the steed starves," has never within the memory of the living race of farmers been so completely verified; but during the past and the present season matters have begun to freshen up, and the sheep have had rather better crops for the early bite turnips, which, unfortunately with the late delayed spring grass other agricultural prospects brighten. The farmers have made free with their deliveries of the last crop, and the corn trade still continues in the same dull state as usual. Since the 7th of January the wheat averages have risen nearly five shillings, and taking those of the last six weeks as a comparison with the corresponding period of last year, there is an advance of six.

Mr. Druce's sale of the Leicester sheep, as advertised his flock to be sold, without reserve, by Mr. Strafford, at his farm at Beeston, in Bedfordshire, on the Friday of the Canterbury week. The sale took place, and one hundred and sixty ewes and shearling, directly descended from forty-five sires and thirteen purchased of Mr. Burgess, Mr. Stratford's previous and fifty from Mr. R. Burgess's, of Colgrave. His rams alone have on many occasions let as high as 200 guineas; but this year he has determined to turn to shorthorns, and purchased extensively both at the Milcote sale, and still more recently at Mr. Phillip's. The latter sale gave the Leicester people a taste of what the Duke could do, as the thirty lots of shorthorns, many of them young calves, averaged £48 14s each. Mr. John Wheelhouse's Bedale sale commences on Tuesday at Hart, near Hartlepool. We hear that the success of his last sale in Yorkshire has induced him to announce a few herd; and that Mr. Holden has unfortunately lost one of his celebrated Grand Duchesses. From a further report of the Jamaica Show we observe that all the imported cattle have done well, with the exception of a couple in "the best spell of planters' steers," were Herefords. The peasantry seem to have taken to the idea of the bull well, and called them "the buckra races."

Mark Lane Express gives a very elaborate account of the leviathan herd of Mr. Stratton, of Broadchitton, which is generally kept up to about 350, and attended to by fifteen herdsmen and dairymaids. About 200 cows are in milk, and heifers are kept in the course of the year, and the dairy cows number 110. The pails yield on an average about 320 gallons of milk a day, which produces 1 cwt. and the cheese-tub can hold 200 cwt. at a time, and turns out rather more than 100 cwt. a week, while the butter-tub contains from 130lb. to 200lb. Mr. Stratton uses eight of his shorthorn heifers in the plough, and finds them do their work quite as well as horses or Herefords; and the Devonshire cattle, the sire of some of his best prize steers, not only works in the bush harrow and at the stubble-rakes, but is considered quite equal to the butter-churn. The herd has almost entirely sprung from Moss Rose, the produce of Phenix and a heifer of Mr. Booth's, and other purchases of the Highworth market. From her came young Moss Rose, by Lottery, and Mathias Clark, by Lottery, (a very large animal) from Sir William Hayes, M.P.), and both these branches have been perpetuated respectively through the three Dunless of Gloster and the Manchioness line. Mr. Stratton has won a prize-taker began in 1857 at Devizes, and since then he has won in hard cash £3077 8s, exclusive of the silver and bronze cups and silver medals. Of this £1077 was gold medals were won in France, and £300 and twenty-four gold and silver medals at Smithfield and Birmingham.

"LUCREZIA BORGIA." BURLESQUED.

THE burlesque at the St. James's certainly merits the success which it has achieved. The piece has not been written down to get into it some really sterling good writing. The verses are sold in sense and in sound. The management, also, has placed it on the boards with decorations that will at once satisfy, and ought to make it especially attractive, for they are in excellent taste as well as costly. The ballet portion is exceedingly good, and Miss Lydia Thompson has more than one opportunity of triumph, of which she is decidedly quick to avail herself. Mr. Young as the homicide mother, and Miss Wyndham as the mystified son. We present our readers with the first scene of the clever extravaganza, which will recognise the action of the close of the first act of the opera, in which the infamous woman is exposed to insult in the public street. The grouping and accessories of this situation are highly creditable to the management.

The visitors at the South Kensington Museum last week numbered 13,277. On Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday (free days), there were 3293; on Monday and Tuesday (free evenings), 3733; on the three students' days (admission to the public 6d.), 1893; students' evening (Wednesday), 311.

By a resolution of the council of the Queen's College, Birmingham, that institution has been closed. The floating debt exceeds £4000, and many have ceased no means whatever of discharging it.

JEAN BECKER.

JEAN BECKER, the young violinist who has been for some time past delighting the audiences of the Monday Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall, was born at Mannheim, in the year 1836, and in his earliest years gave evidence of the possession of a musical organisation of the highest order. He learnt to play on the violin and pianoforte without help from a master in so wonderful a manner that, at the urgent persuasion of many of the principal inhabitants of the town, his parents consented to his becoming a musician. On leaving Mannheim for Paris, where he studied under the first masters, he was presented by his admirers and friends with a fine violin by one of the first makers. Recalled to Germany by the Grand Duchess Stephanie, there he was made chamber violinist to her Highness and director of the concerts at the theatre. During the last twelve months he has been gaining fresh laurels in travelling through many of the principal towns of France and Germany, commencing with Paris and Leipsic, where he played with brilliant success, and of whose musical societies he is a member. His facility of execution, his bow arm, and his fine reading of the works of the great masters, as well as his brilliant execution of the music of the modern school, are, indeed, marvellous. Jean Becker, like all men of genius, is so modest and unassuming as to win the respect and esteem of all those who have the pleasure of his friendship.

CONVERSAZIONE AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

THE members of the Vocal Association held a conversazione and concert on Wednesday week at the St. James's Hall, securing a very large attendance by the attractive entertainments provided for the occasion. The hall was tastefully decorated, curtains being suspended from ceiling to floor in the organ recess and in front of the back galleries. In the body of the building, pictures, photographs, stereoscopes, statuary, vases, and other works of art were displayed to good advantage on tables and screens. Pictures, too, were placed in the side galleries, in the midst of the panels upon which are inscribed the names of English musicians, composers; and thus the entire scale was transformed into an elegant reception-room—shrubs and flowers being distributed in various directions to increase the general effect. The staple entertainment of the evening was a grand concert by members of the association, assisted by several vocal and instrumental performers, many of whom made their first appearance in London on this occasion. Among the débutantes, Miss Oldfield, who sang the cavatina "Forgi amore," from Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro," made a favourable impression by the taste and feeling with which she executed the composition allotted to her. As usual, however, at entertainments of this character, the audience paid by no means an undivided attention to the concert, but chatted, saluted friends, strolled to and fro, peeped into stereoscopes, examined the paintings placed about the room, and partook of tea, coffee, and ices, only occasionally casting a glance at the programme to see what point had been reached. Under these circumstances the enterprise of the directors in bringing forward so many vocalists whose talents were altogether untried in the metropolis was especially noteworthy. The concert introduced no fewer than five of these performers to the audience:—Madame Goldberg Strossi, from the Scala, Milan; Herr C. Schneider, first tenor to the Duke of Nassau; Mdlle. de Rettler, from Berlin; Mdlle. Marshall; and Miss Blanche Cole, aged ten years. The pieces selected, twenty-one in number, were for the most part of an attractive character, comprising selections from the Italian, German, French, and English schools of music. Messrs. Benedict, Lindsay Sloper, and Charles Horsley, were the conductors.

FIRE AT GREENWICH.

SHORTLY after eleven o'clock on Monday se'nnight a fire, which resulted in the destruction of thirteen houses, broke out on the premises of Mr. W. Hunter, of Wood Wharf, Greenwich, immediately facing the river. The fire was discovered in the sail-loft, and in an instant the flames, owing to the inflammable nature of the stock, burst forth with great fury. A mounted messenger was at once dispatched to London for the engines of the Fire Brigade, three of which were soon on the spot, together with those of the town and Greenwich Hospital, and the powerful floating engine from her Majesty's Dockyard at Deptford. A party of the Donegal Militia, and a large number of police, under the superintendence of Inspectors Monk and Mott, aided in keeping off the crowd and working the engines. Notwithstanding a plentiful supply of water the flames speedily extended to the premises of Mr. Cobbett, boat-builder; Mr. Stapleton, smith; and Mr. T. R. Huntley, coal-merchant, facing the river. The exertions of the firemen were here directed to the saving of three valuable vessels in the yard of Mr. Hunter, the destruction of which must have taken place but for the immense volume of water poured on the flames, the vessels escaping with slight damage. The flames, however, unfortunately communicated with a line of small houses in the immediate vicinity, seven of which were consumed, and six others on the opposite side of the street were so much damaged that they will have to be razed to the ground.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

OZONE.—An account of Dr. Andrews' discourse on this very interesting subject at the meeting of the Chemical Society, with the discussion upon it, in which Professors Hofmann and Williamson took part, appears in the last number of the Chemical News.

THE ACADEMY OF SCIENCES OF PARIS have just published two volumes of Memoirs, each solely occupied with a most elaborate work. Vol. xxv. contains "Principes d'Embryogénie, Zoogénie, et Tératogénie," with twenty-five plates, by M. Serres; and vol. xxxi. contains the fruits of the labours of M. Duméril, during sixty years, being his great work on the structure, habits, and classification of insects, entitled "Entomologie Analytique," copiously illustrated with excellent woodcuts.

GULF-STREAM EXPLORATIONS.—The remarkable variations in the temperature of the water are shown in diagrams which accompany Dr. Bache's memoir in Silliman's American Journal, last number.

THE NEW PLANET discovered at Bilk by M. Luther on March 24 has been named "Concordia."

THE DENSITY OF VAPOURS AT VERY HIGH TEMPERATURES.—In the Annales de Chimie MM. H. Ste.-Claire Deville and L. Troost detail their experiments on this subject. The apparatus employed and the mode of operating are first described. In the vapours of mercury, sulphur, cadmium, and zinc, other vapours were subjected to experiment, and the results tabulated.

TREE FROM POMPEII.—M. Savarese, the Neapolitan Minister of Public Works, has just presented to the Academy of Sciences at Paris a cypress-tree with the roots which was dug out under his own eye during the excavations for a canal in the neighbourhood of Pompeii, at a depth of five metres (about 16½ feet). These cypresses, aged then about thirty-six years, were buried by the memorable eruption which, in the year A.D. 79, overwhelmed the cities of Herculaneum and Pompeii. These trees have remained perfectly upright with their roots beneath the various strata accumulated during eighteen centuries.

AURORA BOREALIS.—The eminent meteorologist, M. Coulvier Gravier, has just published his observations relating to the aurora which he saw at Paris on the 9th inst. Some notice of the coming phenomena was given by the magnetic perturbations at the Imperial Observatory. The aurora appeared about 8.30 p.m. in the form of a white ray, which gradually assumed the appearance of a cirrus cloud. Other changes of form and colour followed till its final disappearance at 11 59. During the periods of greatest intensity the observer perceived the summit of a small arc elevated about two or three degrees above the horizon. The aurora seemed to travel from east to west. A shooting star of the first magnitude, with a train, was obscured while darting through a ray of the aurora, but recovered its brilliancy after its passage. Flashes of lightning were seen before and during the continuance of the phenomena; and it is stated that at midnight the bell of Tourville la Chappelle was struck by lightning, and reduced to ashes. The writer of these lines saw an aurora on the same evening at Kentish-town, near London, about eleven o'clock, for a few minutes only. The colours of the striæ were white and reddish white.

ANTIDOTE FOR CHLORINE.—M Bolley has observed that while occupied in researches upon the violet of aniline he suffered no inconvenience in atmospheres charged with chlorine, and that the mucous membrane of his nostrils was tinged violet-blue. Experience confirmed his impression that these effects were due to the inhaling a small quantity of the vapour of aniline. Two young persons in the laboratory, overcome by chlorine, obtained relief by breathing the vapour of aniline exhaling from an aqueous solution of that alkaloid. M. Bolley, therefore, confidently recommends aniline as a prophylactic or antidote against the deleterious effects of chlorine.—Repertoire de Chimie.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.

Dr. SPENCER COBBOLD delivered his second lecture "On the Herbivorous Mammalia, now living in the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park," on Tuesday last. He concluded his account of the giraffe, by referring to the great strength of its horns, and the use of its flesh for food (which Dr. Cobbold, from his own experience, compared to veal) in its native country. The general structure of ruminants, and the beautiful adaptation of their grinding teeth and four stomachs to their vegetable diet, were next explained. The peculiar characteristics of deer, the gradual development of their horns (occupying several years), and the analogus of these appendages with the vegetable kingdom, and their form and physiology, were fully considered. The lecture concluded with an account of the wapite, roe, axis, and muntjak, illustrated by large coloured diagrams.

The first Friday evening discourse of the after-Easter series (April 20) was delivered by Dr. COBBOLD—the subject being "The Scope and Tendencies of the Natural-History Sciences"—Sir Henry Holland, Bart, in the chair. The speaker advocated the necessity for a wider diffusion of these sciences, and maintained that the laws presiding over organic and inorganic matter were the same in former epochs of the earth's history as those which are in operation at the present day, and he endeavoured to prove that the varying results now witnessed were brought about by the degree, direction, and conditional circumstances under which those laws were permitted to operate. Having illustrated this hypothesis in various ways, he considered the educational and moral claims of the biological and geological sciences, and espoused the cause of teleological inferences, but warmly deprecated all leaning to unscientific dogmatism. He advocated the introduction of the tutorial method in all natural science-teaching, in combination with the delivery of public lectures. "Under such advantages," he said, "the study of the natural-history sciences was productive of the happiest results—the impressions left upon the mind being perfectly analogous to those which the ear receives from a well-sustained series of harmonies." Next Friday's discourse will be delivered by Mr. F. Abel, on a deeply-important subject—"The Application of Science to the Efficiency and Welfare of Military Forces."

Professor D. T. ANSTED commenced a course of eight lectures on some recent Researches in Physical Geography and Geology on Thursday last week, the subject of the first lecture being the surface of the Atlantic Ocean as introductory to one on its depths. The geographical position and extent of this ocean (or great canal), as the Professor termed it, its inland seas (the most important being the Mediterranean and Baltic), its gulfs, bays, and islands (including the United Kingdom) were described and contrasted with those of the Pacific. The nature and causes of the regulated motion of its waters were explained, as produced by winds, and exemplified in storms, tidal waves, and marine currents—the Gulf Stream and its important relations to our own country being particularly referred to. The Professor then spoke of the colour (varying from deep ultramarine to emerald green and grey) and the saltness of this ocean, and of the ice occasionally drifting through it; and, lastly, referred to the Sargasso Sea, as illustrating its vegetation; and also the whales and their food (the jelly-fish and other minute animalcules), which are the most remarkable of the animals of the open water. He concluded with an allusion to the important relation of the Atlantic to man, and its great influence on the progress of civilisation. (The area of this ocean is roughly estimated at 27,000,000 square miles; its average length at between 7000 and 8000; and width at between 3000 and 4000 miles; the total length of its coast line at 55,300 miles.)

Mr. F. ABEL, Director of the Chemical Establishment at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, on Saturday last commenced a course of lectures on the Association of Heat with Chemical Force. The lecture was devoted to an examination of the conditions favourable to the considerable development of heat by chemical action. The nature of chemical attraction or affinity and its results were briefly examined, and illustrations were given of the varying intensity of its action. The chemical union of gases and liquids with solids was shown to be greatly promoted by the minute division of the latter, whereby the intimate contact was more fully effected, which was indispensable to the establishment of chemical attraction between different bodies. The minute division and intimate contact of solids were shown to be generally insufficient to bring about chemical action between them, which would ensue, however, on the application of powerful and sudden compression or friction. The promoting effect in those cases was ascribed partly to the approximation of the particles, and partly to the heat resulting from friction and compression. The effect of solvents in promoting chemical action was examined and illustrated, and an account was then given of the effect of porous bodies in promoting chemical action between gases, by their property of collecting the latter within pores and condensing them to a very considerable extent, thus bringing about the approximation of the particles of different bodies essential to the operation of chemical affinity. Charcoal and platinum were shown to possess this condensing power to a high degree, and several important chemical changes constantly occurring in nature were ascribed to this peculiar property of porous substances. Finally, the effect of heat accumulating as the result of chemical action, or applied from external sources in various ways, was shown to promote sudden chemical changes when the matter to be influenced was in a favourable condition, and to establish chemical action throughout large masses of matter, as in the case of a large quantity of gunpowder, which would be exploded by the application of a spark or heated iron to the most minute portion of the whole. The lecture was copiously illustrated by a series of very interesting and instructive experiments.

The ex-King of Oude has inserted a notice in the Indian Gazette warning the public, both in India and in England, that he has discharged from his service Musseroodeen Khan, alias "The Moulvie," who lately appeared in a bill transaction in one of our English law courts; and that he will no longer be responsible for his doings, or for any debts that he may contract as agent to his Majesty.

By order of the French Emperor, a monument will be erected to the memory of the Maid of Orleans, on the right shore of the River Oise, near the old bridge of Compiègne, where the heroine was taken prisoner by the English, on the 23rd of May, 1430. The monument is to consist of a statue of Jeanne d'Arc, and will be executed after the well-known work of the Princess Marie of Orleans.

This entry is not mentioned by Douce or Twiss, nor has it, to our knowledge, ever been printed.

A. B., Coventry.—White should capture the Kt, and then check with his Rook, having a winning attack. See "Chessplayer's Handbook," p. 132.

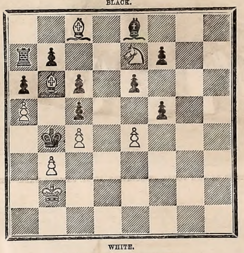
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 844.



WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K to Q Kt sq	P takes P
2. B to Q R sq	P to Q Kt 7th
3. Kt takes P	Kt to K 3rd, or to K B 4th

4. Kt to Q 3rd, or to Q B 4th (according to Black's move), giving double check and mate.

PROBLEM No. 845.

By Mr. CONRAD BAYER.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

CHESS IN BELGIUM.

The following capital Game was played at Brussels between Mr. HEYDEBRAND DER LAZA and Mr. de RIVES.

(Counter Gambit in the K's Bishop's Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. H. L.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. B to Q B 4th	P to K B 4th
3. P takes P	Kt to K B 3rd
4. P to K Kt 4th	P to Q 4th
5. B to Q Kt 3rd	B to Q B 4th
6. P to Q 3rd	P to K R 4th
7. B to K 3rd	B takes B
8. P takes B	Kt takes K Kt P
9. Q to K B 3rd	Q to K R 5th (ch)
10. K to K 2nd	R to K B sq
11. P to K 4th	Q Kt to Q B 3rd
12. P to Q B 3rd	P takes K P
13. P takes P	B to Q 2nd

(Instead of this, Black might apparently have moved his Kt to K B 7th with considerable effect.)

14. Q Kt to Q 2nd	P to K Kt 3rd
15. P to K R 3rd	K Kt to K R 3rd
16. Q to K 3rd	K Kt to K Kt sq

(A fine attack was obtainable here by now capturing the K B P with B, and leaving the Kt en prise. For, suppose—

16.	Q B takes K B P
17. Q takes Kt	B takes K P
18. R to K R 2nd	Q to K Kt 6th
19. Kt takes B, or *	Q takes R (ch)
20. K to K 3rd	Kt to K 2nd
21. B to K 6th	Q takes Q Kt P

And must win.

* 19. Q takes R (ch)	K takes Q
20. R to K B 2nd (ch)	B to K B 4th
21. Q Kt to K 4th	Q to K R 5th

And again Black ought to win.)

17. K Kt to K B 3rd	Q to K B 3rd
18. P takes P	Q takes K Kt P
19. Q R to K Kt sq	Q to K R 2nd
20. Q R to K Kt 5th	Castles
21. K Kt takes K P	K Kt to K B 3rd
22. Kt takes B	Q takes Kt
23. K R to K Kt sq	K R to K sq
24. Q R to K Kt 7th	Q to Q 3rd
25. K R to K Kt 2nd	Kt takes K P
26. Kt takes Kt	Q to K 4th
27. B to Q B 2nd	Q to Q Kt 4th (ch)
28. B to Q 3rd	Q tks Q Kt P (ch)
29. K to B 3rd	Kt to K 4th (ch)
30. K to Kt 3rd	Q R takes B
31. Q takes Q R	Q takes K R (ch)

And the game was finally drawn.

An instructive Partie between Mr. HEYDEBRAND DER LAZA and Mr. ALLIX, in which the former gives the odds of the Pawn and two moves.

(Remove White's K B Pawn from the board.)

BLACK (Mr. A.)	WHITE (Mr. H. L.)
1. P to K 4th
2. P to Q 4th	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q 3rd
4. B to Q 3rd	P to K 4th
5. P to Q 5th	Q Kt to K 2nd
6. P to K R 3rd	P to Q B 3rd
7. P to K B 4th	Q Kt to K Kt 3rd
8. Kt to K B 3rd	P takes K B P
9. Castles	K Kt to K 2nd
10. K to R sq	B to Q 2nd
11. K Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q B sq
12. Q to K R 5th

(If, 12. B takes K B P | B takes K B P
13. P takes B | Kt takes B
14. R takes Kt | Q takes K B P (ch)
15. K to Kt sq | Q to K Kt 6th (ch)
16. K moves | Q takes B, and wins.)

12.	K to Q sq
13. Q B takes P	Kt takes B
14. R takes Kt	Kt to K Kt 3rd
15. K R to K B 2nd

(R to K B 7th might have led to some interesting play, e. g.:—

15. R to K B 7th	Kt to K 4th
16. Q to K Kt 5th (ch)	K to B 2nd, or (a)

(a) 16.	K to K sq
17. R takes K Kt P	B takes R
18. Q takes K B P	R to K B sq
19. B to K 2nd, &c.)

17. Kt to K 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq

If K to Kt 3rd, Black has a forced and beautiful mate in seven moves.

18. R takes K B	R takes R
19. Q to K 7th	B takes Kt
20. Q takes Q P (ch.) &c.)

15.	B to K 2nd
16. Kt to K B 5th	B takes Kt
17. K R takes B	B to K B 3rd
18. Q R to K B sq	Q to Q 2nd
19. R takes B

(Would not the following have been a preferable mode of play?—

19. B to K 2nd	K to B 2nd
20. B to K Kt 4th	Q to K 2nd
21. P takes P	P takes P
22. R takes B	P takes R
23. Q to Q R 5th (ch)	K to Kt sq
24. R to K B 3rd

Threatening to play Kt to Q 5th, &c.)

19.	P takes R
20. R takes P	Kt to K 4th
21. Q to K R 6th	K to B 2nd
22. B to K 2nd	P to Q Kt 4th
23. P to Q R 3rd	Q R to K Kt sq
24. B to K R 5th	Q R to K Kt 6th
25. Kt to K 2nd	R tks K R P (ch)
26. P takes R	Q tks K R P (ch)
27. K to Kt sq	R to K Kt sq (ch)
28. K to B 2nd	R to K Kt 7th (ch)

And White wins.

TWO-YEARS' RHEUMATISM CURED by AMERICAN HOMŒOPATHIC SWEEPING PILLS.
The above Pills have cured me of two years' rheumatism. They are the best Pills I ever took. I have taken them for a week, and can walk to-day without a stick. I have been treated by several doctors, but they all failed. I have been assured I could not live by expressing only as much as my strength would allow. I am now in my seventy-fifth year, and I feel sure that, by the use of these Pills, I shall live many years. I have recommended them to many friends, and they have all found the same benefit. I am ready to make affidavit to the truth of the above statement. Any medical gentleman wishing to see me can call at my residence, 3, Bridge-street, Pimlico, S.W. And I can truly thankful that I did hear of them, and, if I had only been better informed myself about medicines, I should not have suffered so long. THE PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MAY.

FORTUNATELY for the fashionables of Paris the gleams of sunshine in the early days of April were favourable to the annual promenade at Longchamp, so that an opportunity was given to the élegantes of the capital for the display of their taste with the view of introducing novelty or improvement. For more than a hundred years this dress rendezvous has been strictly observed.

The promenade of Longchamp this year presented its usual crowd of Parisians, but more went there to see than to be seen. The finest toilets were those displayed by the carriage folk, some few of whom wore short-waisted dresses, somewhat in the style of the First Empire, and when our George III. was King. It is said that by-and-by we shall return to the mode of our grandmothers, from which we have been so long estranged that it appears almost ugly to our eyes. The two extremes of crinoline—too much or none at all—were duly represented by persons of sufficient influence to carry with them a certain number of partisans. As for bonnets, for the most part of crape, and rather increased in size, they were of two classes, perfectly simple, or bedizened with a diversity of gilt ornaments, which are becoming more and more preposterously the vogue, not only for chapeaux, but for other portions of the female costume. The cashmere shawls of uniform colour were much admired, not merely for their simplicity, but also on account of the ease with which they adapt themselves to the graceful proportions of their fair wearers. The long continuation of our several winters this year has hitherto prevented the adoption of a real spring costume; but let us hope that the month of May will enable us to give some interesting information there anent in our next article.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Walking Dress.—This robe is of blue silk. The corsage is high-necked, buttoning in front with velvet buttons of the same colour, surrounded with lace. The buttons, gradually increasing in size as they descend, are continued down the front of the skirt. The waist is round, and held in by a band fastened with a buckle. Tight jockey sleeves, pointed on the shoulder, bordered with a lace trimming from below, and mounting as high as the shoulder seam. The bottom of the sleeve (from which proceed two tulle puffs, ornamented with lace) is turned up, and longer behind than in front, he two edges of the trimming being held together by double buttons united by a small chain. The skirt has seven folds, and is furnished with five flounces, the top one surmounted by a narrow plaiting. White crape bonnet, crossed from the top of the crown to the front by silk ribbon, rather narrow curtain; large bunch of myosotis on the side; tour-de-tête of tulle ruching. Collar of Valenciennes lace.

Fig. 2. Dress for a Little Girl.—Mohair frock; the corsage plaited to form a number of little tubes in front and behind, surmounted by a band of plaiting, edged with silk ribbon. The sleeves are composed of two puffs of mohair and two small silk flounces, one of each alternately. A narrow silk band maintains the waist, to the side of which is attached a bow with long streamers. The skirt is furnished at the bottom with a high band of silk, upon which falls a flounce in mohair, surmounted by a plaiting-bordered top and bottom with silk ruching. This pretty toilet is completed by a silk headnet ornamented with a velvet plaiting all round and bows on one side.

Fig. 3. Evening Dress.—Light green silk robe trimmed with green silk of a darker tint. The ruchings on the body and skirt are edged with violet silk. The whole of this dress is cut on the straight, there being no seam at the waist, either in front or behind. A row of flat buttons, small at the top of the corsage, but increasing in size as they descend, ornaments the front of the dress, which is attached at the waist by a wide band of light green ribbon. The manner in which the ruching is put on gives the appearance of a pelisse. The sleeve, very wide and puffed, is drawn together at the extremity by narrow plaits; at a short distance above is a band of ruching made to correspond with that of the other parts of the dress. Plain narrow collar, under-sleeves, and white cuffs in figured lawn.

WHITECHAPEL MOUNT.

THE formation of the East and West India Docks in the early part of the present century caused roads to be made through the low, marshy fields extending from Shadwell and Ratcliff to Whitelow, marshy fields extending from Shadwell and Ratcliff to Whitechapel-road. Cannon-street-road, leading from the activity called the Whitechapel Mount to St. George's-in-the-East, so increased the value of the land on each side of it that it was determined by the Corporation of the city of London to take down the Mount. This was effected in 1807 and 1808, and Mount-place, Mount-terrace, and Mount-street were built on the site, not only preserving the remembrance of the Mount, but marking the space it occupied. In "Lysne's Antiquities of Middlesex" the dimensions of Whitechapel Mount are stated to be in length 329 feet; breadth, 182 feet. It was considerably higher than the London Hospital; an extensive view was obtained of the villages of Limehouse, Shadwell, and Ratcliff. Our Engraving shows that face of the Mount on the south side of Whitechapel-road, and part of the London Hospital. The churches in the distance are Old Shadwell, Limehouse, and St. George's-in-the-East.

In Stow's annals mention is made of an encampment of the Commons near the Mount at Mile-end during Jack Cade's rebellion. In 1642, during the war between King Charles and the Parliament, the committee of the militia of London issued orders that the principal entrances to the City should be defended by forts, and the space between them by lines and intrenchments. The Mount at Mile-end formed part of the defence of the eastern entrance to London. A formidable stonework was erected on the ground now occupied by the London Hospital, the trenches extending from Mile-end to the Thames. It appears from the journal published at this period that the defences of London were executed with zeal and alacrity by various classes of the community. In an extract from a London paper, May 3, 1642, we read "that the works in the fields northward of the City go on amain; many thousands of men and women go out daily to the trenches." On May 3 it is stated that "on this day there went out a great company of the Common Council and other chief men of the City, with their wives and families, all working in the trenches with alacrity. On the 23rd of May three thousand porters went voluntarily to the works with their wives and children; on the 5th of June five thousand shoemakers worked in the trenches; on the 7th six thousand tailors; on the 9th of June five thousand sailors and persons connected with the river laboured in the Mile-end and Shadwell works. It was on this day that Sir Kenelm Digby, while standing on the Mount, was arrested as a spy and conveyed a prisoner to Winchester House."

The ground thrown up from the intrenchment was used to increase the height of the Mount. After the Great Fire of London a considerable portion of the ruins from the streets at the east end of the City were piled upon the Mount; and, subsequently, the height was increased by the accumulation of rubbish from new-erected buildings. A report was widely spread that the ruins from the Fire of London were thrown over a deep pit where the bodies of persons that had died of the plague in 1665 were thrown, and great danger was apprehended from the removal of the Mount in 1807. Many persons expected to find articles of value among the ruins from the fire. However, neither the remains of dead bodies nor any objects of interest or value were found during the removal of the Mount, though the earth thrown into the hundreds of carts that were daily employed for many weeks was carefully examined.

REACTIONARY SYMPTOMS.

THE country has for some time indulged in a belief that the policy which, for want of a more expressive and comprehensive phrase, has been designated the policy of progress was an accomplished fact. It is true that a party, less numerically strong than influential by its position and its wealth, which gave no overt adhesion to that doctrine, has continued to exist as a power in the State. But that party has long been considered to be undergoing a process of transition. First Toryism—a word which nowadays needs interpretation when it is used—was softened down into Conservatism, and by another gradation the title expanded into Liberal Conservatism. The culminating point of this hybrid system was reached when certain noble Lords and honourable gentlemen, by a political accident, found themselves invested with the responsibilities of office. The policy of adaptation to the necessities of the times was found to be a sine qud non to the retention of office, and Toryism passed into its third phase—that of concession, accompanied by lip-deep denial of recantation. The wily and adroit managers of that party which plain men, who judged from the letter of the rules of their order, supposed to be simply obstructive in their ideas and their action, seized a favourable opportunity of bidding for the reputation of being the real friends of the people; and it was their object and their task to show how much more real sympathy they had with the masses than mere cold and oligarchical Whigs; and there were even signs of an intention to outbid the inconsequent and ill-organised Radicals. Claiming for themselves unity of purpose and true sympathy with the popular wants, and a closer and more homogenous organisation as a political machine, they announced that they were about to do the great work of the nation, in the sense that the nation desired it to be done, in contradistinction to the puner efforts, if not to the mere talk, which characterised the pronounced professors of Liberalism. How this was to be effected, by what hocus-pocus, the public waited to see. On the result of two attempts on the part of a Conservative Government to work out Liberal principles it is superfluous now to dilate. Powerless to defy a settled public opinion, their dislike of which in Opposition they did not affect to conceal, with the accountability of the conduct of affairs resting upon them, they sought by trimming and finesse to reconcile the incongruities of their position. But the public mind of England never accepts dexterity as a substitute for principle; and in the case of a Tory Ministry, half-heartedly supported by Tory members of Parliament, the country was unable to recognise in the conduct of its affairs that sort of advance which is to be found in the progression of a boat when the rowers look one way and pull another; and once more the dealing with Liberalism was committed to those who were the avowed and open professors of that creed.

It would seem, however, that the Conservative party has caught a curious kind of inspiration from its brief tenures of actual rule as a party. There are many indications on their part of a belief that they have gained strength in the country. They appear to think that the closeness of their organisation has told, in the political contest, on the loose order and somewhat undisciplined condition of the Liberal ranks. It does not need any very keen powers of perception to discover that in the House of Commons the Opposition entertains an opinion that it is master of the situation; and this is accompanied by a delusion that they are equally potent out of doors. So strong has been the operation of this phantasy on the Conservative mind that it has, in the first place, given rise to an insolence of tone and demeanour in Parliament, and a reckless throwing off all disguise as to their real motives and intentions; and, in the next place, it has evidently encouraged or rather misled them into a belief that they have only to form and construct a regular plan of operations in order to re-establish themselves as the ascendant influence in the country, with a capability of carrying out their policy quite commensurate with their wishes and their aspirations. We have already pointed out the hardy offensiveness of the line taken by the Opposition in dealing with the Reform Bill. True it is that they have caught daring from the uncertain sound which the trumpets of their adversaries have given out. True it is that the situation of that measure suggests a comparison with the condition of Jerusalem during its last siege: for the defenders of the citadel are squabbling about the pettiest objects within while the enemy is thundering at the gates. It is no more in Conservative than it is in human nature to resist the temptation to take advantage of any want of tact and any want of unity which may exist amongst adversaries whom, combined, it would be simple fatuity to attack. Nevertheless, the mode in which the originators of the Reform Bill themselves, and in a still greater degree the manner in which numbers of members of Parliament calling themselves Reformers have dealt with that measure, are not sufficient to account for the attitude which gentlemen opposite have assumed. The tone of ridicule and insult which has been adopted by the Opposition in the debates on the Reform Bill has not been levelled merely at the measure itself. It has taken the direction of contemptuous incredulity as to the existence of any desire on the part of the public out of doors to see an extension of, we will not say political privileges, but—despite this specious attempt to limit the exercise of the franchise to a trust—of political rights. This fact is assumed with a sarcastic leer as the basis of all Conservative argument against any attempt at amending the representation of the country; on it is founded, as we think, a fallacy which has kindled first into a hope, then into a belief, that the moment for political reaction has arrived. It is becoming apparent that the Opposition entertain a confidence that a policy of obstruction is now the most likely to have a strong and compact party in the House of Commons can dictate to the country, and with impunity grant or withhold, as their humour takes them. For purposes and projects of reaction the Conservative party is now organised and sedulously organised. There is no doubt about it. Not content with a reckless assumption of mixed insolence and derision in their treatment of those measures which are at least proposed in the spirit of appreciation of the advanced intelligence, good sense, and good qualities of the great body of the people, they even descend to all the petty trickery which the forms of the House o Commons enable them to use; and they have gone so far as to give so striking an illustration of their doctrine of obstruction as to resort to physical force in keeping members out of the House at a moment when, by means of what is technically termed a "count out," a serious delay and an inevitable and utterly damaging, if not destructive, ridicule would have been cast upon the Reform Bill. This is one among the many smaller signs and portents of an arranged and organised anti-reform conspiracy which, the country may be assured, has been planned and plotted by that Conservative party which, in the days when it was attacking and pulling down Lord Melbourne's Ministry, was trucking its peculiar feeling by the expression of a sympathy with and the assertion of an aptitude for ministering to, the real wants and aspirations of the people, of which they claimed, if not exactly the monopoly, at least a better understanding and a more genuine appreciation, than the cold and unsusceptible followers of Lord John Russell or the wild and untutored, however well-meaning, disciples of Mr. Bright.

A still more remarkable token of the new organisation of the body of political power, which now must be designated as the Obstructive party, is the course which they have taken on the subject of the bill for the abolition of church rates. Until now this measure was opposed with hardihood and activity, but this Session a subtler effort has been made to damage the bill in its different stages through the House of Commons, and the culminating point of opposition was reached on the third reading. On that occasion Mr. Whiteside, after a long and elaborate speech by outside calculations, was put forward to tear at the measure in his most approved fashion, and the whole strength of the Conservative party was adroitly and assiduously brought up for the division, so that the third reading was carried in a manner and, indeed, in numbers sufficient as to justify the Upper House in refusing its assent to the bill. From the loud, prolonged, scarcely decent yell of triumph with which the result was received was to be gathered the feeling which now animates that party. Its perspective lookers-on have something manical in that vocal outburst. One could not but remember how often of late years that party has been afflicted with judicial blindness to the signs of the times, and how often they have inflicted that peculiarly unpleasant penalty, a wail to precede destruction. Be sure that once again they have mistaken the temper of the times, and are bent on damming up the current of progress until, in some fated hour, it breaks down the barriers which interrupt its flow, and overwhelms them in its impetuous and angry flood. If in another year there should be popular demonstrations, and even popular violence, it will not be forgotten that it was to the course which is is apparent that the Conservative party is now pursuing, in short by an organised opposition in the national feeling will be owing; and if there is any tact, or judgment, or prescience left in their leaders, they will at once see the prudence of inducing their followers to let well alone.

ANNECY, SAVOY.

THIS city, which the French papers declare to have lately signified its willing annexation to France, is situated at the extremity of a plain at the foot of the beautiful lake of the same name. Its situation is picturesque, with a wild mountain background, and there is evidence of great antiquity in many of its public buildings. Few Continental towns present a more striking appearance, especially on market days, the deep shade of the covered arcades which line the principal streets contrasting with the glare of the sun on the open space by which the lake discharges itself through the town into the valley beyond. Its chief manufacture is at present that of cotton goods, but in ancient associations and manufacturing importance it is the first city of Savoy. It mentioned in history as early as the twelfth century, and in the year 1415, having been destroyed by fire, was restored by Amadeus VIII., who established the fair spinning wool for which it has always been celebrated. Annecy has much activity in the business of linen, bleaching, and the printing of cottons, which received great support from the encouragement the Annecy must not fall under the general denomination of those "barren slopes" which France, under the influence of her geographical necessities, is appropriating to herself by the annexation of Savoy. But the historical association of the place may be considered that it is the resting-place of the remains of the celebrated St. Francis de Sales, Bishop of Geneva; and that Cousseau, escaping from Geneva, here wrote many passages of his "Confessions." Within a north side of the lake stands the Chateau de Menthon, the reputed birthplace of St. Bernard, the Apostle of the Alps.

THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL.—We understand that for the present the Duke of Argyll, Lord Privy Seal, will take the duties of the Postoffice, in the absence of the Earl of Elgin. This temporary arrangement is made in consequence of an uncertainty as to the duration of the noble Earl's absence. The most recent advices from China bring the intelligence that an ultimatum has been sent in by the English and French plenipotentiaries on the 25th ult., to Pekin, giving the Court of Pekin thirty days to determine whether it will accept and execute the treaty in its entirety, and comply with such other conditions as arising out of the late outrages as the Allies judge fitting. If the terms of acceptance of our terms reach Lord Elgin on his road, he will return to Shanghai to resume his office. If, on the contrary, our demands should not be complied with, his Lordship will proceed to China on his ordinary mission, and a successor will be appointed to the office, which the public convenience will require to be provided for.—Post.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur prints the debate in the Corps Législatif on the new commercial treaty which took place last Saturday, and was continued this week. The old familiar arguments for protection were brought forward by several deputies, and cleverly replied to by M. The project of law concerning the tariff for wools, cottons, and raw materials was adopted by the Legislative Body on Wednesday by 239 against 4 votes.

One more of M. de Thouvenel's notes on the Savoy question, bearing date May 15, is of great interest to the Federal Government of Switzerland, appeared in Wednesday's Moniteur (of which it occupies four columns), and finally, repeating that it is impossible to abandon N2 of the final act of Vienna, and contesting the Swiss argument that the mere fact of the occupation of the lake districts by Switzerland in the year of Thursday morning published another note of M. Thouvenel, dated April 16, proving that the annexation of the Switzerland of Savoy and Nice would not violate the neutrality of Switzerland.

Monday's Moniteur gives the following as the final result of the voting in Savoy:—Inscribed on the lists, 135,449; voted, 130,939; for annexation, 130,533; against, 235; scratched, 171. Abstained from voting, 4610. Two medals to commemorate the annexation of Savoy and Nice to France are to be struck at the Paris Mint. THE KINGDOM OF SICILY.

Nothing definite can be gathered of the state of affairs in Sicily from the broken and contradictory reports which continue to come to hand. We are left to draw their order the telegraphic despatches, which, it will be seen, give but casual and uncertain glimpses of the insurrectionary movement. The following telegram from Naples (via Genoa), April 24, the Royal troops attacked the insurgents intrenched in the town of Carini on the 13th inst. The fight lasted seven hours, and continued during the 19th, 20th, and 21st. Reinforcements having then reached the Royal troops, they compelled the insurgents to retire to Monreale, where they defeated them. The loss of the latter had 300 killed. The number of wounded on both sides was considerable. The town of Carini has been plundered, and many houses set on fire. Several persons have been shot at Palermo.

Another despatch from Naples, dated April 26, says:—The insurgent bands are being pursued continually, and are retiring before the Royal forces. They had intrenched themselves in a small town called Piana, on the road to Corleone. On the Royal troops, by whom they have been completely destroyed. The remnants have made their escape to the mountains, and through the kingdom of Naples has most perfect order and tranquillity prevail.

The Government at Turin has received the following despatch, dated Palermo, April 25:—Yesterday evening, April 24:—The insurrection at Palermo has been suppressed. The state of seige is maintained. Messina is tranquil. The armed bands in the interior of the island are being pursued on all sides by the troops in all directions. The coasts are watched. Great agitation prevails throughout the island, including the province of Trapani. It is believed that Garibaldi has landed and the Royal authority has not been re-established.

The latest despatches are as follows:—

Genoa, May 1.—Advices have been received from Naples to the 28th ult., which say that Cagliari has arrived at Naples from Palermo, bringing families of the military. The insurgents were meditating an attempt on Palermo. A column which left Messina on the 26th inst. was engaged in serious combats with the insurgents on the 21st and 22nd at Galati, which town was destroyed. The Royal troops fell back upon Messina. Another column under the command of General Letizia, had left Palermo in order to subdue Trapani. It was supported by two frigates.

Marseilles, April 30.—Letters from Naples to the 23th inst. confirm the statement that Carini had been taken by assault after three days' fighting. The town had suffered greatly. The Government states that only a few hundred insurgents remain to be pursued. Letters affirm, however, that the supplies of provisions to the town had been often intercepted. The recent struggles had caused great excitement. The details are still contradictory.

Marseilles, May 2.—Advices from Messina to the 28th ultimo state that perfect tranquillity, but general discouragement, prevailed. The number of persons who had been arrested was considerable. The chiefs and leading men had been revealed in prisons. Transportation of a number of individuals was spoken of. Contradictory rumours were in circulation. It was said that a Neapolitan General had been captured by the insurgents—that the seat of Government was about to be transferred to Messina—that the disembarkation of several insurgents had taken place in Calabria—and that the garrison of Palermo, although numbering nearly 20,000 men, apparently feared to proceed into the interior.

The General has issued a proclamation, which in substance is as follows:—As a faithful veteran, and a native of Hungary, I am unconditionally devoted to the benevolent intentions of the Emperor. Confidence is necessary to the successful development of the resources of the country, and I will, therefore, in the interest of the country, oppose with firmness and decision any attempt to disturb the peace of the people by secret machinations. I count on the co-operation of every man of honour in my efforts to serve and benefit my dear native country and the empire at large.

It provides for the construction of five steam screw sloops of war adapted to the African coast; increases the number of officers; adds 100 disabled men or reward of 100 dollars for delivery to the United States' Marshal of any slaver landed in the United States; makes the fitting out or ownership of vessels engaged in the slave trade piracy, and punishes with imprisonment for life instead of death; makes it criminal for a ship master employed to display false colours; and for the purpose of neutrality makes it the duty of the officers of a ship before going to the African coast to report to the United States' Marshal for examination, to the effect that American vessels sold abroad shall return to the United States for a new register, or bring back proof of sale.

In the House of Representatives, the Committee having under consideration the expediency of prohibiting by law all coercion measures in the territories, by a casting vote, had presented an interesting report on the subject. A bill on the subject was forthwith introduced by Mr. Howard, of Massachusetts.

The Japanese Government appropriated 50,000 dollars to meet the expenses of the embassy at Washington. It was met at the Navy Yard by Lieutenant Governor, the British Government, with extent to the ambassadors a cordial invitation to visit Great Britain.

CANADA.

The Quebec correspondent of the Morning Post writes, on the 12th of April, as follows:—

The Legislative Parliament resumed its sittings, after the short Easter recess, on the 10th inst., but nothing of particular interest has yet occurred in the course of the present Session. The Government measure respecting the sale and management of the public lands, has been introduced, and is now reading in the House of Assembly, and may now be considered law.

"The whole country is now on the alert, and everywhere preparations are being made for the visit Highness the Prince of Wales a reception which shall live in his memory for many a long year. Meetings are being held in town and country, and the usual loyal enthusiasm prevails. In the House of Assembly last evening the Hon. Mr. J. Cauchon moved a resolution for the appointment of a committee in reference to the reception of the Prince of Wales. Quebec the ancient is stirring. The Montreal people are busily arranging for an exhibition of the industrial and agricultural products of the province, and it is thought the Government will extend pecuniary aid to the Board of Arts of Lower Canada, in whose hands the whole arrangement of the matter has been left. In Toronto the members of the Corporation have invited the officers and members of the three national societies to co-operate with them in getting up a suitable celebration when his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales visits the city; and in Hamilton preparations are being made for the erection of a crystal palace, and for holding the Upper Canada Provincial Fair, which it is trusted will be honoured with the presence of the heir-apparent.

THE BANK BRIDGE.—It turns out that Bank Bruck, the Austrian Minister of Finance, whose suicide was announced, has not committed suicide, as recorded last week, but by his own hand. Telegraphic particulars of this painful suicide appeared in the Times of the 30th ult. Our impression is that Mr. The Baron had been cut his own throat. This is the latest, though possibly not the last, of the suicides in the case of the gigantic fraud on the Government which has been brought to light. Men eminent as contractors, military officers, and bankers have been parties to a series of frauds to an enormous amount, and of which the Government and the nation were the victims; and it appears that Bruck has either shared in, or connived at, these delinquencies for several years past. A severe investigation into all the circumstances commenced some time back, but no particulars of the extent of the evil already ascertained are allowed to transpire. Some of the leading merchants of Trieste and others have been ignominiously cast into prison on suspicion of having been privy to the frauds. The mortal remains of Baron Bruck lay in state on the 27th ult. and the two following days in an open coffin in the dangerous Protestant church at Vienna. It was dressed in his Minister's uniform, and all his decorations were worn on the breast. The face of the body was livid. An immense crowd of persons walked in the deepest silence round the catafalque.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

On Wednesday afternoon a fire broke out in the Euston Hotel, and consumed the upper floor, as well as that of several houses in Drummond street.

A bazaar held at Willis's Rooms on Friday and Saturday last, in aid of the Royal General Dispensary, was attended with considerable success. The latter (Saturday) exhibited a remarkable scene. The room was opened on Thursday, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street.

A meeting of the Horticultural Society was held on Tuesday at South Kensington. It appeared from the report that about £67,000 had been placed at the disposal of the society, which would be applied to the new gardens at Kensington Gore, but they trusted that no outlay beyond the plans of £70,000 would be incurred.

SOCIETY OF ARTS CONVERSAZIONE.—The first conversazione of this session took place last Saturday evening, at the house of the Society of Arts, in John-street, Adelphi. The principal attraction of the evening was a collection of upwards of two hundred miniatures and drawings by the late Mr. Richmond, R.A., which were arranged in the large and fine great room. This collection is now open for public exhibition.

The Commissioners of Sewers metropolitan district completed portion of the new Westminster bridge has been lighted by the new lime light for several evenings by night. The light is on the Surrey side of the centre of the number of oil lights. The light is of a pure white colour and the experiment, if successful, will do away with the oil gas burners in the peculiarity appear as dull as though they were burning in the bright sunlight of noonday.

DIRECT COMMUNICATION BETWEEN THE DISTRICTS LYING NORTH AND SOUTH OF THE THAMES.—At a meeting of noblemen and gentlemen held on Tuesday morning, Earl Grosvenor, M.P., in the chair, it was resolved that the Right Hon. Lord Dunkellin and messrs. W. H. Thackeray, Esq., "that it is desirable to establish a more direct communication between the districts lying north and south of Hyde Park;" the resolution was carried unanimously, and the following noblemen and gentlemen were appointed to act as a deputation to wait upon the commissioners of Her Majesty's Works:—The Earl Grosvenor, M.P., the Earl Dudley, the Earl Dudley, Esq., J. ROYAL MEDICAL BENEVOLENT COLLEGE.—On Thursday se'nnight the eighth anniversary festival of this charity was celebrated at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, in the presence of a large company assembled on the occasion, and amongst them were Feroze Shah and the Hon. Dwarkanath Tagore, the Indian gentlemen who have lately visited this country for the purpose of business to the Institution," remarked that no class of persons deserved so well of the public as the medical profession, and no charity was more deserving than that—as the members of the medical profession. He rejoiced, therefore, that the College had been founded, and had already received twenty-six pensioners with a bonus and a pension of £15 a year, and one hundred and sixty candidates more were waiting for election. In addition to an annuity, clothes were provided with clothing. He was glad to see opposite to him the Indian gentlemen, the bright eye Hindoos, Feroze Shah and Tagore. He hoped his useful life might long be spared. The sum collected for the College on the occasion amounted to £1,000.

PRESERVATION OF LIFE FROM SHIPWRECK.—A meeting of the Royal National Life-boat Institution was held on Thursday at its house, John-street, Adelphi, Admiral Sir Edward Lyons, G.C.B., in the chair. Mr. Lewis, the secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, the chairman announced that the following rewards for the preservation of life by boats stationed at Teignmouth (Devon), and Lytham (Lancashire), for services rendered during the past month, had been granted:—To the coxswain and crew of Teignmouth life-boat, for saving the crew, consisting of eight men, of the brigantine Nancy, of Teignmouth, wrecked on the Horse Rock, near Lizard Point, on the 27th ult., during a severe snow storm; and also to the crew of the life-boat stationed at Lytham for saving the crew, consisting of seven men, of the schooner Ann, of Fleetwood, which was driven on the Lytham sands on the 29th ult. The sum collected for the meeting on the occasion was £50.

FEMALE SCHOOL OF ART AND DESIGN.—Last week the works executed by students of the Female School of Art and Design, in Queen-square, were exhibited to the public. We attended, amongst many others, and were highly gratified with the display of taste and skill exhibited in the various exhibitors in almost every branch of practice—drawings from life and from the antique, modelling, painting, engraving, &c. Considering that in all of which were works of great excellence, many of them of a character that placed it beyond question that the institution was fulfilling the object of this public demonstration was somewhat interesting — this public exhibition of the results of the instruction given there from the discomfort of being closed through the withdrawal of the accustomed Government grant—a step which, we believe, has been taken because the conductor of the schools put forward an appeal to the public, from which we willingly extract the following statement, in proof that the institution is accomplishing at the school, and the number at present is 118, of whom 77 are studying with a view to practice in the various branches of industry, and that the daughters of clergymen and medical men, unexpectedly compelled, by a variety of causes, to adopt the profession of governess, are also receiving instruction at the school, and that the instruction and assistance received here, obtained for them by the influence of the committee, enables them subsequently by means of private teaching. In the last three years the students have taken an annual average of forty local and national prizes, and obtained in the last annual examination, six of them obtained free studentships. Six of these, moreover, during the past year have obtained employment as painting japanned articles, in Wolverhampton; one was for several years a designer for a large manufacturing house in Coventry, another is employed by lithographic; and three are employed in a glass manufactory, where they are engaged in painting ornamental designs on glass. In addition to these, there are many of the former students, who are now engaged in teaching, and who, owing to the influence exercised by the ladies of the committee, are enabled to hope that the patrons of the school, and many friends of intellectual culture will be induced to assist the committee in their endeavours to re-establish the school upon an independent footing on premises of its own, and we heartily wish success to them in this very laudable object.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

Several important institutions of a religious or benevolent character have held their annual meetings during the past week in London.

The annual general meeting of the members and friends of the SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS was held on Monday in St. James's Hall, the Archbishop of Canterbury in the chair. His Grace was supported by a large number of bishops of the English Church and a considerable number of clergy and laity. In introducing the proceedings with prayer, his Grace remarked that the objects of the society had accomplished during the last hundred and fifty years, and of the great success which had attended its efforts in the various countries wherever they had been enabled to proclaim the Gospel. The Rev. Ernest Hawkins, M.A., secretary to the society, read the report, which referred to India, British North America, China, and the other colonies and possessions of the British empire. Numerous bishops, clergy, and ministers were onwards of three hundred in number, and in all cases they were found to be men of high character, of considerable and refined enlargement of the society's missionary operations, both in the British colonies and in foreign countries, and deserving of the most liberal support; that the principle on which the society has long acted, of making it its duty to aid the efforts of other societies as well as its own missionaries, is well calculated to promote the best interests of the colonial Church by rendering it self-supporting and independent of the State, and to extend Christian moral change in the system. The institution adopted recommendations of 160 Government students. The proceedings were enlivened by the singing of an Indian native Christian Government grants: The plan of education adopted had been very successful, both committee depended any fundamental change in the system. The meeting was opened by having opened the meeting with prayer and reading of the Scriptures, the Rev. Mr. Bickersteth, the secretary, read the report of the society. It stated that the success which had attended the operations of the society in India and other countries was highly encouraging. The income of the Society for the year had been—from the depôt at home, 1,341,679; ditto abroad, 676,679; legacies, 1,917; total for the year, 1,342,596; an increase of 251,021 copies over those of any preceding year. The total receipts of the society for the year amounted to £27,539 more than for the year from the ordinary sources of income had been £162,029 13s. 5d., being an increase of £1,329 13s. 5d. upon the previous year. To this was added the sum of £1328 4s. for the Chinese New Testament Fund, and £1,000 for the Bible Society for India, making a grand total of £164,186 2s. 5d.; while the total expenditure of the year had been £170,105 15s. 8d., being a deficit of £5,919 13s. 3d. upon the year. Interesting addresses were delivered by the chairman, the Duke of Marlborough, the Bishop of Carlisle, and several others.

On Thursday week the annual meeting of the BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY was held in Exeter Hall, and was presided over by C. T. Keep, Esq., of Redlands. The income of the society, for all purposes, during the past year, amounted to £27,000 19s. 11d., and the expenditure to £27,121 7s. 10d.——The annual meeting of the BAPTIST UNION was held yesterday week in Exeter Hall, and was numerously attended. Various addresses were delivered.

On Thursday week the annual meeting of the TRINITARIAN BIBLE SOCIETY was held yesterday (Friday) evening.

LITERATURE.

LUCILE. A Poem. By OWEN MEREDITH. Chapman and Hall.

Few out of certain initiated circles know how much verse, and be it said how much poetry, floats along the current of this iron age of ours. The votaries of the beautiful in the abstract, of the romance of the past—enchantment caught perhaps from children, are many and ardent. But a class of poets seem to be springing up which seeks to adapt poetry to the very spirit of the age. It could hardly be supposed that an author who is something more than a writer of verses would take a special Pall-mall Englishman, a May-fair beauty, a city speculator, a brilliant "élegant" of the season, which is to be found in Dumas's pasem, and a Countess of the same nation, at least by her father's side, the other half of her blood being East Indian, who was decidedly pretty ten summers before the story begins, and who has been

The belle of all places in which she was seen,
The belle of all Paris last winter; last spring
The belle of all Baden, and create out of them and their adventures of the heart, or soul, or imagination, or whatever may be the impulse of their doings, a poem extending over twelve cantos, and covering nearly two hundred pages. There is a literary courage in this which is worthy of all admiration, and to a very great extent it seems to us that it has met its reward. We all know by this time what name Owen Meredith is really entitled to bear, and it is not surprising if, with this clue to guide us, we fall into an opinion that we have before us a Bulwerian novel, of the Pelham school, written in verse, and in a metre of which the author stands as he has discovered no traces elsewhere to direct or to warn him, but specimens of which we think are to be found in a production of one Thomas Moore, which is entitled "The Fudge Family." It is not to be denied that, with obvious defects of flippancy sometimes rising into baldness, there is exhibited in this poem range of thought, experience of the world, insight into the working of the human heart, and especially the modern human heart, powers of description, a philosophy of men and things, immense command of language, and a knack of construction in a peculiarly difficult kind of verse, which can only belong to an intellect nearly allied to genius, and a cultivation of the highest order. As a metrical workman Mr. Meredith excels. The skill with which he manufactures the lines of his poem is very great, and if here and there we detect a grappling with the exigencies of rhyme it is quickly followed by admiration of the adroitness with which the difficulty is met. There is art, too, in the building up of the interest of the story, slight as is, at least so far as action is concerned: but dealing even to the last with scenes and subjects that are too near to the hour not to be prosaic in their nature, and with ideas and sentiments and heart struggles which in their inception are not new, the tone and phrase of the poem rise at last to a fitness with that which is sought to be conveyed, and is untinged with the vein of almost boyish banter which characterises even the more serious passages of the earlier cantos. Altogether, the notion to which this poem seems to give rise is, that it is the work of a man who in the most abstract sense, but who, doubting the impressionableness of his age in regard to poetry, thinks it necessary to mingle some of the earthiness of the times with his purer aspirations, in the hope that it will gain that without which even poets peak and pine—namely, readers. We believe this to be a mistake. It is true there are still poets amongst us, it may well be predicated that the race of kindred and appreciative spirits cannot have wholly perished; and it is to them that the true lover of the world must address himself, and not seek by snatches of eccentricity to catch the suffrages of the more multitude, that rush as it runs. Perhaps no better idea of the peculiarity of the poem could be given than the following extracts, taken at random, for the sake of contrast:—

O hour of all hours, the most blest and upon earth,
Blessed hour of our dinners!
The land of his birth;
The face of his first love; the hills that he
The twaddle of his friends, and the venom of foes;
The sermon he heard when to church he last went by;
The speech he reviewed, the money he spent—
All of them things a man, I believe, may forget,
And not be the worse for forgetting; but yet,
Never, never, oh never! earth's luckiest sinner
Has himself to forgotten the hour of his dinner!

Indigestion, that concealance of every bad shall relentlessly gnaw and pursue him with some ache
Or some pain; and trouble, remorseless, his best ease,
As the Furies once troubled the sleep of Orestes.

We may live without poetry, music, and art—
We may live without conscience, and live without heart;
We may live without friends; we may live without books;
But civilized man cannot live without cooks.
He may live without books,—what is knowledge but grieving?
He may live without hope,—what is hope but deceiving?
He may live without love,—what is passion but pining?
But what is the man who can live without dining?

There is something Byronic, when Byron was in the "Manfred" epoch, in this description of a storm in the Pyrenees :—

Ere long,
Thick darkness descended the mountains among;
And a vivid, vindictive, and serpentine flash
Gored the darkness, and shore it across with a gash,
The rain fell in large heavy drops. And anon
Broke the thunder.

And the storm is abroad in the mountains!

He fills
The crouch'd hollows and all the oracular dells
With dread voices of power. A roused million or more
Of wild echoes relentlessly rise from their hoar
Immemorial ambush, and roll in the wake
Of the thunder, whose reluction leaves first the lake
And the wind, that will robber, for plunder descends
Upon valley and village. Where black mountains ends;
He howls as he hovers, or hows his prey; and his hate
Tears the hair of the trembling birch mountain ash,
That clings to the rock, with keen grapnels all torn,
Like a woman in fear; then he bursts on the corn,
And is off. The fierce guide of destruction and terror,
Up the desolate heights, 'mid an intricate error
Of mountain and mist.

There is war in the skies
Lo! the black-winged legions of tempest arise
O'er those sharp, splinter'd rocks that are gleamiog below
In the soft light, so fair and so fatal, as through
Some seraph burn'd through them, the thunderbolt scathing
Which the black cloud unbosom'd just now. Lo! the lurching
And shivering pine-trees, like phantoms, that seem
To wower above, in the dark; and you stream.
How it burneth and roars, on its way to the white
And paralyzed lake there, appall'd at the sight
Of the things seen in heaven!

A MAN'S HEART. A Poem. By CHARLES MACKAY. Smith and Elder.

We have indicated in our notice of Mr. Meredith's poem an idea that he has endeavoured to contend, not wholly unsuccessfully, with the task of reconciling the incongruity of the age with the essential spirit of poetry. No writer has more completely overcome that difficulty than Charles Mackay. He has spoken to the hearts, and the senses, and the sympathies of every class of his countrymen, while he has never sacrificed the dignity of his art, nor descended from that region apart in which the poet-mind moves, breathes, and has its being. Few have gone nearer than he to solve the problem involved in the phrase "difficile est proprie communia dicere." But all this has been said before, and better said, and therefore we will at once proceed to speak our welcome to a poem of more pretension, so far as length and constancy is concerned, than Dr. Mackay has of late offered to the ready notice of the public. Here, again, the story is of our day; and the theme the old, but still ever-new, realisation of the adage that the course of true love never did run smooth. It is a tale of love and jealousy, the latter that shall be parted never-more," and the inspiration has sprung from a picture of a lady, gazing on which the poet "caught her heart's mystery," and tells her tale. The poem is written in blank verse, and, rich here and there as it is in imagery, it is characterised as a whole by that pure English style, and that simple felicity of expression of which the author is a known and acknowledged master. Intermingled with the sterner flow of verse are occasional lyrics which are full of that combined chinking melody and mellow smoothness with which Dr. Mackay has made us all familiar, although as a rule those interwoven songs are graver in their tone, and more studied in their phraseology than most of his essentially lyrical poems. May we, however, hint that the mode in which the one entitled "Geraldine" is introduced, and even the carrying out of the idea, are a little too strongly suggestive of Coleridge's "Genevieve." While murmuring as gently as possible one objection, we may breathe another, and that is to the choice of a name for the heroine. If, as we believe, "Edith Bellenden" is to live in our poetical literature, may she not now and then run a chance of being confounded with another heroine who bore that exact designation in Scott's "Old Mortality?" Recurring, however, to that lovesong which is called "Geraldine," we wish to say that but for its exceeding any reasonable limits for such a purpose, it is the portion of the poem that we should especially desire to quote. We should not, however, be satisfied unless we give tastes of the different qualities of the work. Here is a well-filled treatment of the things of our existence, and time. The hero, an art-dreamer, being urged to action, and having it pressed on him that "those who have gifts owe something to the State," replies—

Ay, ay! yet cannot all men serve the State
In the same fashion! He who writes a book
Brimful of noble thoughts, doth he not serve!
And he who sings a song which makes men wise,
The poor man's heart, and makes it throb with joy,
Hath he done nothing? He who carves a stone
Into immortal beauty, is not he
Some benefit, some service to the nations?
And all the pith of nations shrivels up,
And apples rotten go down to their stores
My calling's Art; and 'twill suffice my soul.

And, for a "song," commenced us to the following:—

How many thoughts I give thee!
Come hither on the grass,
And if thou'lt count unfailing
The green blades as we pass:
Or the leaves that sigh and trumble
To the sweet wind of the west,
Or the ripples of the river,
Or the tumbrous on its breast.
I'll count the thoughts I give thee,
My bountiful, my best

How many joys I owe thee!
Come all where soon run high,
And count the heaving billows
That break on the shore and die—
Or the grains of sand they fondle,
When the storms are overblown,
Or the pearls in the deep-sea caverns,
Or the stars in the milky zone,
And I'll count the joys I owe thee,
My bountiful, my own

And how much love I prefer!
Come scoop the ocean dry,
Or weigh in thy tiny balance
The star-ships of the sky!
Or twine around thy fingers

The sunlight streaming wide,
Or fold it in thy breast,
While the world is dark beside;
And I'll tell how much I love thee,
My beautiful, my bride!

In verity and sincerity we add that, having read this poem, our advice is that every one should seize the opportunity of doing likewise.

ANECDOTE BIOGRAPHY. William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, and Edmund Burke. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Bentley.

If we have understood right Mr. Timbs's object in his numerous interesting publications, it is to bring down the reader in a manner the most prominent, most accessible, and the most calculated to catch the eyes, the most interesting points in the various subjects on which he has dwelt. His books may be characterised as books of reading made easy, although the term is by no means used in a depreciatory sense. In his present venture he means to avow that principle when he says that "to keep pace with the existing rapid increase of books and readers, anecdotic combinations are more essentially necessary now for such as seek to husband that most valuable of all economies—the economy of time." The preparation of the volume before us is an attempt in that direction, in which attractive and valuable matter of life writing in which history and biography are combined. Contemplating such a subject as the lives of the Pitts, Earl of Chatham and Edmund Burke is peculiarly appropriate, for their lives are utterly inseparable from the history of their times. With that indefatigable patience and minuteness of labour which so eminently characterise Mr. Timbs he has, as it were, with the point of a needle picked from out of the larger biographies of these great men the most precious morsels of fact and illustrative anecdote, which he has arranged under separate headings, in such a manner that you cannot open a page but you find something to interest, something to amuse, and something to instruct, or to lead to give impulse to thought and reflection. Each anecdote biography is divided into two sections—the one more purely historical, and the other containing characteristics, personal descriptions, and personal traits of the subjects of these pen-sketched biographies. When we add that the book contains engravings of well-chosen portraits of Chatham and Burke, besides numerous illustrations of particular portions of the letterpress, we only adduce another point in favour of a work which, if it is not all that it pretends to be, has the merit of being quite up to the professions and purpose.

A COMPARATIVE VIEW OF THE HUMAN AND ANIMAL FRAME. By B. WAITEHOUSE HAWKINS, F.L.S., &c. Chapman and Hall.

This folio volume, or rather atlas of plates with explanatory letter-press, the author tells us, is intended "to give a comparative view of the variations in form of the bony skeleton or framework of those animals most frequently required by the artist, designer, or ornamentist," and, at the same time, to impress him with a strong sense of the unity of design and oneness of plan upon which all things are constructed. The volume admirably fulfils this intention, and the drawings in it possess an anatomical correctness which we often look for in vain in works of this class. The author has wisely resorted for models to the magnificent collection of osteological specimens in the Hunterian Collection of the Royal College of Surgeons, and there, assisted by the kindly professors Owen and Quekett, he has obtained all the materials for his excellent and artistic book.

GENERAL LAMORICIÈRE.

Among the recent arrivals in Rome of supposed sympathisers with the cause of the temporal power of the Pope one actually—that of General Lamoricière (whom the celebrated coup-d'état, which resulted in the present French Empire, had sent into exile)—has occasioned much astonishment to all who have calmly considered the question of the Pope's authority over the Roman States. It was at first stated that the General had accepted the command of the Papal troops with the intention of assisting in the restoration of the Romagna to the Government of Pius IX.; but this design must be, at any rate, doubtful, as it is now affirmed that the French Government, which has always urged on the Court of Rome the necessity of creating an army sufficiently strong to enable it to dispense with foreign aid, felt disposed, on the demand of his Holiness, to grant to General Lamoricière the authority to accept the command of the military forces of the Pontifical State. According to accounts from Rome it appears that Lamoricière has received the necessary consent of the French authorities to accept the command offered, and has already declared that sufficient elements of military strength exist in the Papal States—in men, fortified places, and provisions to allow of the retirement of the French troops from their prolonged occupation.

The following biographical details of the Pope's Commander-in-Chief may prove interesting.

General Lamoricière was born at Nantes, on the 5th of February, 1806. He was educated at the Polytechnic School, and, after two years passed at Metz in military studies, entered the corps of engineers, and became a captain in 1830. Attached to the Algerine expedition he was named a captain of the newly-created regiment of Zouaves, and in the numerous African combats rose with rapid advancement. He took a part in eighteen campaigns during the fifteen years, and by the victory accomplished at the capture of Abd-el-Kader in 1847, when his military career was supposed to have terminated, and the grand cross of the Legion of Honour was conferred upon him.

In the beginning of 1848 General Lamoricière was sent to the Chamber of Deputies by the electors of the Sarthe, and, in the department of the Sarthe. He took his seat on the Opposition benches, and was the Minister of War in the short combinations vainly proposed by Thiers, Molé, and Barrot, on the eve of Louis Philippe's overthrow. On the 24th of February he presented himself at the scene of revolt in the uniform of a colonel of the National Guard, and proclaimed the abdication of the King, and regency of the Duchess of Orleans; but his efforts to uphold himself wounded, and he was only saved by the intervention of some constituents from the popular fury of their comrades. He refused the post of War Minister, or any military appointment, under the Provisional Government. During the months of June, he placed himself, without the disposition of General Cavaignac, fought against the insurgents, and on the 25th of June was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the War Department, which he held during six months. Faithful to the policy and fortunes of General Cavaignac, Lamoricière attached himself, both by his votes and his actions, to the most moderate fraction of the Democratic party. After the election of Louis Napoleon to the office of President of the Republic the General offered but little opposition to the new power, although he disapproved the course events were taking at that time in Italy. In the subsequent election he was named a representative of the people by the department of the Sarthe and of the Seine, chose to sit for the latter, and became one of the staunchest defenders of the Republican Constitution. In July, 1849, at the time of the intervention of the Russian arms in Hungary, he was sent upon an extraordinary mission to the Court of St. Petersburg, where he arrived after the defeat of the Hungarians, but was well received by the Czar. However, he demanded his recall as soon as he heard of the dismissal of the Odilion Barrot Ministry. From that time Lamoricière employed his influence in the Assembly, of which he was several times named Vice-president, in endeavouring to counteract the policy and foil the designs of Louis Napoleon. On the 19th of July, 1851, he voted against the revisal of the Constitution, and, on the 17th of November, in favour of the project for submitting the military power of France to the Assembly. As many of our readers will remember, he was arrested in the morning of the 2nd of December, on the occasion of the famous coup d'état. He was for a time shut up in the fortress of Ham, but subsequently conducted to Cologne by the French police. A few months later the General refused to take the oath to the new Constitution promulgated by the then President; and from that period resided as an exile in Germany, Belgium, and England, down to the end of 1857, when, on the occasion of the sudden death of one of his children, who had remained in France with Madame Lamoricière, the Emperor immediately granted to the General permission to return to his native country, which he has just quitted on the doubtful mission to which we have alluded above.

THE RECENT FIRE IN RED-CROSS STREET.

SEVERAL fires occurred on Sunday week in different parts of the metropolitan district, some of them attended with the loss of several thousand pounds' worth of property. The most serious of them was the one in Red Cross-street, which, breaking out at three in the morning, and lighting up for hours the whole of the City and the Surrey side of the river, was not extinguished until late in the day. The premises which the fire encircled were of considerable magnitude and of great antiquity, having escaped the Great Fire of London, and formed a block of houses extending from the corner of Barbican round into Redcross-street, Cripplegate. Adjoining them on one side was an extensive distillery, and a row of small houses let out to a number of poor families. The firemen kept to their work without intermission until past seven o'clock in the evening, when they happily succeeded in extinguishing the flames. The houses, 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, are completely destroyed, in addition to a portion of the back part of No. 6; and the loss in stock is considerable.

The following is Mr. Braidwood's report of the injury done:—"Nos. 2, 3, 4, (in Red Cross-street, Cripplegate. Messrs. Johnson and Gillman, wholesale boot and shoe makers. The three buildings burned down. The contents of Nos. 3 and 4 insured in the Northern Fire Office. The buildings insured in the Phœnix. No. 2 not insured. No. 1, ditto. Messrs. G. Boswell and Co., tea dealers and grocers. Premises and contents all but destroyed. Ditto, second and third floor, belonging to Mr. Chas. Scott, inspector of the City Police. Contents destroyed; insured in the Liverpool and London. No. 5, ditto. Mr. E. Hoare, tobacconist. Building burned down and contents consumed. The premises insured in the Phœnix. Contents unknown. No. 6. Messrs. Harmer and Pearson, distillers. Side wall, roof, and upper floors damaged by fire and breakage; the rest of house and stores by water. THE RECENT FIRE IN REDCROSS-STREET.—THE RUINS.

SIGNOR CAMPANA'S NEW OPERA, "ALMINA."

THE accompanying Engraving represents the principal scene in the second act of this opera. Almina, the heroine, has been betrothed to a young man who is believed to have died in a foreign land; and she is forced by her family into a marriage with another. After the ceremony she dies, apparently of grief, and is entombed in the family vault. In the meantime her lost lover returns, and, hearing of her death, descends to her tomb to mourn over her remains. While so engaged, Almina, who has only been in a swoon, revives and rises from the tomb, and stands before her lover, who starts back in awe and amazement. The performers are Mdlle. Piccolomini and Signor Giuglini.

SWORD-BAYONET EXERCISE AS PRACTISED BY THE BRITISH INFANTRY.

TO fix and unfix bayonets was all the instruction given in the use of that weapon to the infantry that so successfully fought the battles of Marlborough, and afterwards those of Wellington, and while the practice of the sword was carried to the utmost perfection, and its principles demonstrated by carefully-elaborated diagrams, the foot soldier was merely taught to charge in one position, and, when met by a stout resistance, he, in the confusion that ensued, was left to use or misuse his weapon as chance might direct; indeed, it was as frequently clubbed as used in any other way; the consequence was that, although the victories were brilliant, the losses were proportionately great.

The bayonet exercise has been used for years in almost all the armies of the Continent, and experience in actual service has taught the French to consider it as part of a soldier's education; but, according to our ideas of utility, the French army has carried the scientific use of the motions and poses are so numerous, and many of them bearing so strong a resemblance to each other, that it appears to give the recruit an unnecessary amount of labour to learn them; many, indeed most, of the motions in our bayonet exercise have been borrowed from those in use in the Continental armies, but we have endeavoured to simplify them, to choose the best, modify them to our own ideas, and render them thoroughly available in the arts of attack and defence.

Great diversity of opinion exists among military men as to the respective merits of the sword-bayonet and the short three-sided bayonet. Both have their advantages as well as their defects. With the former the assailant has the advantage of being able to cut as well as to thrust. This he is enabled to do with great effect, on the hands of his enemy particularly: many opportunities also occur of inflicting cuts on the legs. Its length is also necessary for troops armed with the short rifle, so as to place them on an equality with those armed with the long one. But, on the other hand, its leverage at the end of the rifle is a great drawback to its utility, as a man of but moderate strength is liable to have his guard borne down without much difficulty. The reason why riflemen are armed with the short rifle is that it is supposed to be easier to bring the sights to bear on each other more rapidly in skirmishing than with the long one. This, however, many persons well up in the subject dispute; and when a battalion of the Rifle Brigade was armed with the long Enfield, during the Kaffir War, they found no difficulty whatever in using it.

The motions for the bayonet practice, although given in regular order in our Engraving would, of course, either in action or in trials of skill, be used according as circumstances might dictate. The skill of the bayoneter is brought much more actively into play when engaged with a skilful swordsman than with a man armed with a rifle and bayonet. If the man using the bayonet is not thoroughly up to his work, the swordsman is enabled to seize the rifle with his left hand and deliver the cut six at the neck of his opponent. This, however, the other may avoid by rapidly shortening his weapon and instantly striking with the point.

Light infantry and rifle corps should be taught to perform the bayonet exercise, both with the right and the left hand, and leg to the point: this will be found to serve the purpose of a system of gymnastics. Loose practice should be encouraged, a button and pad being fixed on the point of the bayonet and masks worn to prevent accidents. It is good practice to allow one man to be opposed to two or three assailants, when he must endeavour to keep them in his front by shifting ground, to attack them with feints, and to perform rapidly in succession all the available thrusts and parries. He should be particularly taught to take advantage of any object by which he can support his rear when engaged with a horseman. The foot soldier has little time for deliberation. He must, by swinging from side to side, endeavour to avoid the sword-arm of his enemy; and, should he succeed by a well-directed thrust in throwing over the horse, he must be down on the man before the latter has had time to recover himself, as a dismounted trooper is in single combat, perhaps, more formidable than one on horseback.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1869.

THE rifle movement has received a new impetus of a strictly legitimate character. In lieu of any further imitation of the least respectable phase of Continental patriotism, instead of volunteer balls, volunteer concerts, volunteer theatricals, and other trivialities we are to see volunteer targets, upon which the effigie ney of our Household Guard, as marksmen, is to be severely and no mourably tested. The meeting is to be at Wimbledon in July, so that ample time is allowed for men of commonveranse to prepare them selves for this examination. Her Majes ty offers the handsome prize of £250 for the best shot, and the Prin ce Consort will give another £100, and there are gold medals and other rewards of merit. The Household Brigade has always been the earnest no intelligent, and so amenable to strict di sciptine in the early part of its history that there can be no doubt of its devoting itself with English determination and practical good sense to the matter in hand. We only wish to remind them that, when it becomes our business to depict the scene on Wimbledon Common, we shall have the gratification of accom panying the representation with a record thoroughly honourable to the Household Brigade by the way, that the number of low-class subsc ribers here have been outrages committed upon the men at drill by blackguards of the class who are permitted to reform the ritual of St. George's-in-the East. To appeal to the finest feelings and gratitude of such rabble, and to remind them that gentlemen are giving time and labour to the work of pre paring themselves to protect their fellow-citizens, would be hopeless, but the police authorities ought not to be twice apprised that such outrages have taken place. However excellent the Volunteers may be to defend themselves, it is exceedingly un desirable that they should be placed in a false position in respect even to such persons as annoy them, and the duties of the police in such a case are clearly defined.

At the end of last week the bill for the abolition of church rates came on for the last debate on the second reading, and was closed by addresses from three of the leading orators in the House, Mr. Whitbread, Mr. Bright, and Mr. Disraeli. A division was taken, and, instead of the large majority which has hi therto backed the measure, the second reading was carried by nine only. The prolonged cheering of the Opposition testified to its feeling as to this result, which looked more like a defeat than a victory, and has taken a prominent part in the anti-church-rate movement do not hesitate to assign a cause for this change of circumstances. They say that the ultra-Dissenters who were examined before the Committee on the bill have unprudently committed to the most declarations that they looked upon the abolition of the rate as merely one step gained in the campaign against a State Church, and that they designed the separation of the Church from the State, and the confiscation of the property of the Church to which it is held to have alienated numbers who object to this impost, but believe that a national church is the best safeguard against priest craft on the one hand and indifferentism on the other. Let this be granted as the real object of the Liberation Society and Mr. Miall, and what shall we say of the ethics attributed to reasoners who refused what they considered a rightful demand because it was likely to be followed by a demand that would be wrong? Let us refuse to be bullied by what we think a bad cry. This discourse we believe that in his next bill he will endeavour to cheat.

Lord Raynham—whose exertions in the cause of humanity towards the horse, hold among our fellow-creatur es and among our animal servants, deserves that he should be mentioned by spoken of, although we differ from him in matters of detail—has carried by rather a large majority a bill for inflicting very severe flogging on all persons who beat women. Now, no person would regret to hear that any one of these miscreants (may the wicked ever Holland, who brutally maltreated his wife at the time when every instinct of nature dictates the utmost tenderness to a mother) had been handled with the most unsparing severity, or had received at duly qualified hands such treatment as Sayers or Heenan would bestow at need. The first impulse when one reads of such an atrocity is to wish that the neighbours had tied up the scoundrel by the arms to the nearest lamp-post, and given him at the drummer's non-musical office. But impulses will not do. We want to protect woman, and, much as we may like to avenge her, that is not the direct way of aiding her under our present system of law, which throws upon her the onus of proof against her persecutor. She will not prosecute the brute to the whipping-post, and there would be no public officer to do it, we must be content with working out the system of protection to which she will be an assenting party. Lord Raynham's bill will be no doubt much modified in Committee.

From the Nestor of the Lords, Lord Lyndhurst, the Poers have had a solemn warning upon the state of the Navy. The venerable nobleman has convinced himself that our fleets are not sufficiently powerful to encounter those of our neighbour. Any one of Somerset, for Government, replies that we are quite as strong as is necessary. His Grace's explanations leave our tain points open to the grave doubt, and, at all events, it is clear that the duty of providing qualified sailors is one that must be followed up with unrelaxing zeal.

The last telegrams from Spain announce a curiously pacific solution of the problem, what was to be done with the pretender to the crown, whose unfortunate General was shot as a sacrifice to offended Royalty before the latter could listen to any other arrangements. If the news is to be depended upon, the Count de Montemolin and his brother have discovered that their chances are gone, that Spain will hear no restoration of the old, bigoted tyranny, and that the best thing they can do is to accept the situation, and swear allegiance to their cousin the Queen. This is to be done, we are told, and the Princes are then to appear at Court. Assuredly, this is so sensible a way of settling the matter that one hesitates to believe that diplomacy can have achieved such a triumph. But will the newmade loyalists be permitted free action in the country. Spain is against them; but they have sufficient believers in the old blood and the old aristocracy to make themselves troublesome at some crisis in Spanish affairs. Suppose Charles Edward had taken the oaths to King George, would he have done so let the Chevalier settle at Mise Linwood's, Leicester-square?

The opening of the Royal Academy is the social topic of the metropolis—

> In Glory's fires we dry our tears, and in the lustre of the pictorial display seek to forget that Piccolomini has retired from the operatic stage. A perfect tempest of concern, grand Mendelssohn doings at Sydenham, Mr. Holman Hunt's noble painting, considered for eighteen months at Jerusalem, and worked upon for seven years, the victory of St. Alban's (so named from his connection with Tribery) for the Chester Cup, and the merciless blockade of Fleetstreet also give Londoners subjects for talk. It is true, by the way, that, when Mr. Thwaites takes the sewerage of the Strand in hand, that rather useful thoroughfare will be broken up for two years!

The foundation-stone of new parochial schools for West Derby was laid on Saturday last by the Rev. Canon Stanley, Rector of Liverpool, on a suitable site, given by the Earl of Sefton and Mr. H. H. Blundell. Will be erected accommodation for 400 children, and a master's house. The cost will be about £4000, of which £1867 has been obtained by a grant from the Privy Council, and the remainder is immediately required.

COUNTRY NEWS.

HER Majesty has granted a respite of the sentence of death recently passed upon Michael Sieman at Dundee.

On Monday morning as true rival tradesmen were blowing up each other's safes with gunpowder at Burnley, one of the safes charged with powder was blown into the air, and fell through the roof of a house, breaking in their night killing a child and severely injuring two men.

The meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society on Tuesday night upwards of forty men connected with betting operations were arrested at the Agricultural Hall, Liverpool. They were charged with conspiring to rob the local magistrates, and liberated; but Mrs. Smith, the keeper of the house, was fined £50 and costs, or to appeal against the decision.

BERKSHIRE ELECTION.—On Wednesday the election of a member to fill the vacancy in the representation of Berkshire, occasioned by the decease of Captain Lascelles Iremonger Vernon, took place at Maidenhead, Abingdon. Mr. Robert Palmer proposed Mr. Richard Benyon as a fit and proper person to represent the county in Parliament. Mr. Percy Frankland, seconded the nomination; and, no other candidate having been proposed, the High Sheriff declared Mr. Benyon to be duly elected.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF THE LIVERPOOL SAILORS' HOME.—Early on Saturday morning the Sailors' Home was almost entirely destroyed by fire. A policeman and a steward were killed, and another steward was dangerously injured from leaps which he made. There were more than one hundred sailors sleeping in the building when the fire broke out, and many of them had to jump from the windows to the ground. The building, which was opened in 1851, cost £30,000, but was insured for £20,000 only. We intend to give next week an illustration of the Sailors' Home on fire.

LODGING-HOUSE KEEPERS.—In the Court of Common Pleas, on Monday, a case came on which raised a question as to the extent of the liability of lodging-house keepers in reference to the property of persons to whom they let lodgings. The plaintiff, it was stated, took furnished apartments in the defendant's house, and took with him there certain articles, but, in consequence of the defendant not taking proper care of his house, they were stolen. Mr. Justice Keating put it to the jury that the question of opinion and fact must be judgment for the defendant. To ascertain whether there was any duty of taking care of the goods of the lodger he must consider the circumstances, and it was clear that no court, no tribunal, no judge had ever affirmed that proposition. It was the duty of the lodger to take care of his own property.

R. JOHN ORRELL LEVER, M.P.

THIS gentleman, whose Portrait we give as an appropriate companion to the "Launch of the Connaught," is well known both in Great Britain and America as the founder of the Galway line of Transatlantic steamers. Mr. Lever made the first successful attempt to establish a mail service to America from an Irish port. It has long been seen as a geographical fact that the shortest mail route to America must be from a port in the west of Ireland; but the small amount of Irish commerce, the almost entire devotion of the landed interests of that country to agriculture, the lack of spare capital, the vis inertiæ of the people, and, perhaps, some jealousy in England, have confined the American mail service to ports on this side of the St. George's Channel. Mr. Lever commenced running steamers from Galway in the summer of 1858, and with such marked success, particularly in passenger traffic, that in 1859 a joint-stock company was formed, under the title of the Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Navigation Company, of which he is one of the directors. A contract for a fortnightly mail service was entered into by her Majesty's Government, under the late Administration, and the service is to commence in the month of June.

In consequence of the active part taken by Mr. Lever in the establishment of a new commercial era for Ireland, the inhabitants of Galway invited him to stand for the borough on the occurrence of a vacancy, in February, 1859, when he was duly elected. At the general election following the dissolution in May, he was again returned as one of the members for the borough.

Mr. Lever is a descendant of an old Lancashire family, represented during the early part of the reign of George III. by Sir Ashton Lever, of Lever Hall, near Manchester. Mr. Lever's early mercantile career was in the corn trade at Manchester. A few years since he commenced business at Westport, Ireland; had several corn-mills, and started a line of steamers from Westport to Liverpool. These were very successful, and he soon afterwards determined to open a line of steam-packets from Galway to America, a project that will ever be associated with his name—the "Lever Line" of steamers happily inaugurating an era of prosperity for Ireland. Mr. Lever is one of the younger members of the House of Commons, being now in his thirty-sixth year, and forming a part of that commercial element that has been lately treading on the heels of hereditary honours with great rapidity. Mr. Lever married a daughter of J. Dorning, Esq., of Swinton, near Manchester.

Mr. Lever's energy of character and indomitable perseverance are well known and clearly evinced in his career, he having established two lines of ocean steamers and been twice elected to Parliament before he was thirty-five years of age. He is also one of the directors of the South Wales Railway Company.

JOHN ORRELL LEVER, ESQ., M.P. FOR THE BOROUGH OF GALWAY.

MODANE, SAVOY.

PROCEEDING from Chambery to Mont Cenis the principal stations are St. Jean de Maurienne, Modane, and Lans-le-Bourg, of which we gave a View in our Number for April 7. Railway communication is now complete as far as Modane, and in four or five years from the present date, according to the calculations of Victor Emmanuel's engineers, the sub-Alpine tunnel that will connect France with Italy will be terminated. Mont Cenis will then be penetrated by carriages propelled by steam and illuminated with lamplight; the great deeds of travellers, warriors, and armies triumphant over the physical difficulties offered by the passage of the Alps in former times will no longer inspire the poet's muse, and a tour through France and Italy will consist in a monotonous voyage at the rate of forty miles an hour, the mountains being pierced by tunnels and the boundaries of the two countries converted at those points into iron-bound roads. When the passage under Mont Cenis shall have become a fait accompli a journey from Paris to Florence will be attended with less of the picturesque en route than a run down to Gravesend viâ Tilbury Fort, and the tourist of 1865 will be enabled to "do" the Alps, in more senses than one, by gliding imperceptibly through the large hole made under the great mountain chain whose name recalls to mind a souvenir of ancient, mediæval, and modern times in the persons of Hannibal, Charlemagne, and Napoleon.

Since the war in Italy Modane has increased in importance. It is a large, well-built country town of about 18,000 inhabitants, who seem generally in a prosperous condition. During the late campaign we gave a Sketch of the arrival of the first French troops, on their way to Italy, at the fountain in the interior of the town. Our Engraving will be found on the front page of the Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for May 21, 1859. Our present Illustration represents the general aspect of Modane, enlivened on a recent occasion by the entry of the soldiers of the first battalion of the French 85th Regiment of the Line, who made a short halt there previously to their departure for the formal military occupation of the capital of Savoy (Chambery) as French territory.

LAUNCH OF THE "CONNAUGHT."

ON Saturday week this magnificent vessel was launched from Messrs. Palmer's yard at Jarrow, in presence of a vast assemblage of persons. The North Eastern Railway Company ran a special train, which started from Newcastle at two p.m., and this, as well as the ordinary train, which left at an earlier hour, was crowded with passengers of all classes eager to witness the introduction of the largest steamer ever launched on the Tyne to her native element. Great numbers of ladies and gentlemen clustered in and around the building-yard, crowded the decks of steamers and all sorts of craft in the immediate vicinity of the scene of operations, raised upon every available elevation, and margined the opposite shore of the river. The launch had been fixed for four o'clock, and a short time previous to that hour, and while the workmen were preparing for the chief event, Mrs. Charles Palmer performed the ceremony of naming the ship by breaking a bottle of wine against her bows. Meanwhile the men were busily removing the various preps and drags which kept the Connaught stationary on the ways, and when the last lock which bound her to terra firma was unlocked, she moved, slowly at first, but steadily, in the direction of the river, the band of the Northumberland Artillery Militia playing "Off she goes." Increasing in speed as she proceeded down the ways, her progress to the river was as straight, rapid, and steady as the flight of an arrow, and persons of the greatest experience in these matters declared they had never seen a more beautiful launch. The following gentlemen were on board:—Lord Bury, Mr. Weir, general manager; and Mr. Sweeny, of the firm of Messrs. Nazro Brothers and Sweeny, the Company's agents at Boston, U.S.

The Connaught having been safely moored in mid-river, a large company of ladies and gentlemen repaired, by invitation, to Messrs. Palmer's yard, where a very substantial repast was prepared for them in one of the large workshops. Amongst those present were Mr. Charles Palmer (in the chair), Lord Bury, vice-chairman of the Atlantic Company; Mr. A. M. Wier, general manager of the company; J. O. Lever, Esq., M.P.; Mr. A. Boake, secretary to the company; the Mayor of Newcastle; Mr. Potter; Mr. Campbell, late chairman of the Great Ship Company; Alderman Lambert, of Dublin, ex-Lord Mayor; Mr. Edward M. Sweeney, Boston, U.S.; Mr. Finney Miles, of New York; Captain Leitch, Mr. J. Mc L. Henderson, Renfrew; Sheriff of Newcastle, Vicar of Newcastle (who said grace), Alderman Bell, Alderman Phillipson, Captain H. Bell, Captain Potter, Captain Woods, Mr. Thomas Bell, Usworth; Mr. John Mitchell, Mr. H. L. Pattinson, Dr. Bruce, Alderman Meade, Mr. E. N. Grace, Alderman Glover, Mr. A. Mitchell, Mr. Brown, ex-Mayor of Gateshead; Mr. M. Liddell, Alderman Poppelwell, also a great number of the other leading inhabitants of Newcastle and district. Some distinguished foreigners were also present.

The Connaught was built by Messrs. Palmer Brothers, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, for the Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Navigation Company. She is one of four great steam ships of similar dimensions intended to commence running this summer with increased speed between Galway and New York, viâ St. John's, Newfoundland. The improved facilities of communication by means of the new ships placed on the Holyhead service will reduce the time between London and Dublin to eleven hours, while the transit from Dublin to Galway will not, according to future arrangements, occupy more than four hours, so that a fair start from Galway within sixteen hours will be obtained by a passenger leaving London for America. Another important fact is that by means of these fast paddle-steamers telegraphic news will be transmitted between all parts of America and Europe within six days or less. The Connaught will probably be the fastest vessel afloat, not excepting even the Great Eastern. She is built for speed as well as for passenger accommodation. She is of nearly 3000 tons register, and consequently of burden exceeding almost any ship that has been built for commercial purposes. Her horse-power is 800 nominal, and upon the oscillating principle. The length of this fine steamer is 378 ft., being 360 ft. between perpendiculars. Her beam is 40 ft., and over all 71 ft. 6 in. Her depth of hold is 30 ft. The Connaught will carry about 300 passengers, including 200 first-class, who will be luxuriously accommodated. She is constructed with a spar-deck, straight stem, and elliptic stern, and is on the wave-line principle attributed to Assheton Smith, the great modern Nimrod of the hunting-field. She carries her floor well aft, which, it is said, will give great buoyancy and steadiness at a high rate of speed. But, what is of more consequence, she is built in watertight compartments of extraordinary strength; and we are informed that, were forty feet of her bow carried away by collision or otherwise, she would still float on an even keel without risk. For transatlantic voyages paddle-steamers are much safer than screw, as they can back out of an iceberg, and stand a much better chance on a lee shore. By an improved arrangement great longitudinal strength has been given by Messrs. Palmer to this new vessel, and the transverse frames are doubled. The vessel is throughout double, and in some places treble, riveted.

The Connaught has two iron masts, each in one piece, and is light-rigged (so as to reduce resistance to a minimum when under steam), with fore and aft and gaff topsails. Yards and square-sails can, however, be set, if required. The rigging is of galvanised iron wire, and the life-boats of corrugated wrought iron, fitted with Gladstone's lowering apparatus. There is a telegraph from the bridge to the man at the wheel, and an indicator over the rudder to let the officer on the bridge see that his commands are obeyed. The deck fittings are of teak, and all the appliances are of the most improved description, the capstans being Brown and Harfield's patent. The saloon is magnificent with panelings of walnut root and bird's-eye maple, with beautifully-executed views of Irish scenery alternately let in; and the ladies' cabin is most exquisitely fitted up. The cooking ranges are capable of cooking with convenience for 800 persons. Bar, baths, and smoking-rooms are all equally well arranged and commodious. The accommodations for the passengers forward are equal to first-class in many ships; but the first-class and second-class passengers are completely separated by an excellent arrangement on board of these new vessels. We have stated the power of the engines. The main cylinders, 48 tons, are 80 inches in diameter, and are three in number, placed under the paddle-shaft thwart-ship, and working direct to the cranks and shafts over them. The position of the cranks being at three equal divisions of a circle, a perfect balance is given to the machinery, and the engines, which are unincumbered by air, feed and bilge pumps, can be driven at good speed in the heaviest weather. There are separate cylinders for the air-pumps, which gives great advantage to the engineer in stopping and starting the ship, and keeping the engines in bad weather at a minimum speed; and, in case of derangement or leaking, the full power of this engine is itself capable of propelling a large-sized vessel. The eight boilers of the Connaught are constructed on the most approved plan, and with a total heating surface of 20,000 square feet. They are heated through forty furnaces. The new principle of super-heating, or drying the steam, has been adopted through Beardsmore and Galloway's patent. The paddle-wheels are 34 feet in diameter, and made with feathering floats, which are 12 feet long by 4 feet 8 inches. The engines are by J. B. Palmer and Co.

THE COASTGUARD SERVICE.—The value of wrecked property saved by this useful and gallant body of men amounts, for the year 1859, to a sum of upwards of £800,000, and the number of persons rescued by them from a watery grave, during the same period, to no less than 1250. The total charge for the coastguard force provided for in the estimates for the past year was £724,953.

THE STRENGTH OF THE BRITISH ARMY.—We learn, from a return to Parliament issued on Wednesday, that the British regimental establishment for 1860-61, of all ranks, numbers 144 148; and the effectives of all ranks, on the 1st of this month, 133,962. The return of the Indian establishment for 1860-61 is 83,585; and effectives (India), 94,329. The total number of embodied militia on the 1st of the month was 19,333.

Vice-Admiral Alexander Renton Sharpe, C.B., died on Tuesday at his residence at Stockwell. The gallant deceased was midshipman in the Kent in the expedition to the Helder in 1799; and of the Hercule, at Cape François and siege of Curaçoa, in 1804; Lieutenant of the Topaz in action with two French frigates near Corfu in 1809; and commanded the Scout at the destruction of three French armed ships and some batteries in Sagone Bay in 1811. The late Admiral was in 1815 nominated a Commander of the Order of the Bath, in recognition of his services afloat. His commissions bore date as follows: Lieutenant, Dec. 8, 1806; Commander, March 5, 1809; Captain, Jan. 22, 1813; Rear-Admiral, June 1, 1848; and Vice-Admiral, July 30, 1857. A service pension becomes at the disposal of the First Lord of the Admiralty by the demise of the Admiral.

TRIAL OF SMALL ARMS.—The trial of small-bore rifles proposed to be made at Hythe by the council of the National Rifle Association took place on Wednesday. Lord Elcho, General Hay, and Captain Mildmay represented the association. The only competitors who answered the invitation of the council were Mr. Whitworth and the united gun trade of Birmingham, represented by the chairman, Mr. Goodman, and the most eminent of the Birmingham gunmakers. A preliminary meeting of the council was held at Hythe on Tuesday, at which Lord Spencer, Lord Vernon, General Hay, and Mr. Thomas Fairbairn were present. After consulting with Mr. Whitworth and the United Gunmakers, it was decided that the trials should take place at ranges of 800 and 1100 yards. The result of the trial showed the superiority of the Whitworth rifle, as Mr. Goodman and the United Gunmakers withdrew from the contest before the appointed number of shots had been fired at 800 yards range.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Duke of MARLBOROUGH gave notice that he should move the rejection of the Church Rates Abolition Bill.

In answer to the Marquis of Clanricarde, Lord WODEHOUSE said that a Conference of the European Powers who in 1815 guaranteed the neutrality of certain of the provinces of Savoy which had been transferred from Sardinia to France was about to meet, but neither the place of meeting nor the bases of the Conference had yet been decided on.

The Trustees, Mortgagees, &c., Bill passed through Committee.

The Marriages (England and Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

NATIONAL EDUCATION IN IRELAND.—The Earl of CLANCARTY, in moving for copy of any address in 1859 from the Irish Roman Catholic Bishops to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland regarding the system of national education in that part of the United Kingdom, with the names thereto subscribed; copy of the answer returned by the Lord Lieutenant; and copy of any reply thereto from the said Roman Catholic Bishops, contended that the system of national education in Ireland had proved a failure, and its results were not commensurate with the expenditure which had been incurred with respect to it. The whole plan required reconsideration by Parliament.—The Earl of CORK defended the system, and the Bishop of CASHEL warmly thanked the Government for their efforts to maintain it.—The Earl of CARLISLE said that it was the firm intention of the Government to adhere to the principles of the system, and to do everything in their power to give a good secular education to all who were willing to receive it, at the same time affording them the opportunity of obtaining religious instruction if they desired it.—The Earl of DONOUGHMORE thought that there were some inconveniences in the system, but they arose from the opposition which had been given to it rather than from any fault in itself.—After some further observations from the Bishop of Derry and Lord Lifford, the motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.—Lord PALMERSTON proposed that public business should commence in future at a quarter-past four, instead of half-past four, as hitherto.—Mr. DISRAELI said that it ought to be a condition of this arrangement that Ministers should be in their places to answer questions at a quarter-past four.

THE REFORM BILL.

Mr. WARNER gave notice of a clause in Committee on the Reform Bill reducing the franchise to £4 in certain boroughs, with a condition that no elector should vote for more than two candidates.

Mr. E. JAMES gave notice of a clause abolishing the condition of payment of rates as a preliminary to the obtaining of the franchise.

The adjourned debate on the Reform Bill was resumed by Mr. BENTINCK, who said that Lord J. Russell's speech was entirely an apology for his bill—an apology which was not very graciously received by the House. He urged that Lord John, in every speech in favour of reform in Parliament, insinuated that unless it was passed some such consequences would ensue as accompanied the first Reform Bill, and especially the burning of Nottingham Castle and the riots at Bristol. The measure before the House was not, and was not meant to be, a settlement of the question, but as an instalment and a step towards future changes. He was in favour of such a reform as would confer a fair share of the representation on all classes, and remove the anomalies and injustice of the Act of 1832; but no such result would flow from the proposed bill. In fact, Lord John had always adapted his reform measures to the immediate circumstances and difficulties in which he was placed; and the House and the country would never believe that any measure he introduced was founded on any other reasons; in fact, the bill contained none of the elements or the details of a Reform Bill.

Mr. WALTER was of opinion that the effects of this bill would disappoint every expectation with regard to it, whether for good or for evil; for its effects would, he believed, be very insignificant. Why was reform necessary? Not from any grievances under which the working classes suffered which legislation could remove. One reason of reform was the necessity of a redistribution of seats in that House; another was the propriety of extending the franchise; but the most pressing of all was the constant dangling of this question before the people for the last few years. It was objected to the passing of a Reform Bill that it implied a dissolution of Parliament, and at a very critical juncture of our affairs; but he saw no absolute necessity for such a result. He argued that it was unadvisable to pull to pieces any system of machinery which had produced such good effects as the existing Parliamentary system without some positive assurance that its reconstruction would be an improvement. As to the extension of the franchise, he did not think it so much a question of numbers as of intelligence and quality in the voter. He did not distrust the working classes, but he did distrust the influences which such demagogues as Mr. Bright (portions of whose speeches he quoted) might have on those classes. He hoped that the bill would pass, but so improved in Committee as to be an honour and not a disgrace to the name of Lord John Russell and the country.

Lord J. MANNERS returned to the much-vexed question of the inaccuracy of the data on which Government had based their calculation of the additions to the franchise, and contended that it was an idle farce to go on with this measure until that question was settled. He objected to the measure, not only in reference to the borough franchise but in regard to the mode in which the counties had been dealt with, in the reduction of the qualification and the addition of third members to some of them. In a somewhat humorous strain he attributed the deficiencies of this bill to the twofold occupation held by Lord John, as a domestic legislator and the guardian of the foreign interests of England. He urged the withdrawal of the bill.

The debate was continued by Mr. Hodgkinson, Mr. Hopwood, Mr. Caird, Mr. B. Cochrane (the latter gentleman making an elaborate attack on Mr. Bright, and quoting several passages from that gentleman's speeches out of the House), and Mr. P. Urquhart.

Mr. DU CANE contrasted the variety, and even contrariety, of the arguments adduced by the various supporters of the bill, and contended that the measure had got into a dead lock; while he was at a loss to discover what was the practical advantage gained by the carrying of Lord J. Russell's resolutions against Lord Derby's bill last year, believing, as he did, that this bill was the most one-sided and dangerous of any of its class which had been presented to the House.

Mr. CLAY having supported the bill with some qualifications and suggestions for Committee,

Mr. A. MILLS pointed out that there had been in the course of the debate twelve neutral speeches, twenty-nine against the bill, and only two in its favour. He was inclined not to destroy the bill, but to assist in moulding it into such a shape as might tend to make it a settlement of the question with which it professed to deal. If such an effort should fail he should give his decided negative to the third reading.

Mr. J. LOCKE defended the metropolitan members, who, he asserted, had been held up in the debate as types of a class of representatives which the bill was calculated to increase, and which it was especially desirable not to multiply.

On the motion of Mr. K. MACAULAY the debate was adjourned to the following day.

The other orders were disposed of.

HOUSE OF LORDS—TUESDAY.

OUR NAVAL RESERVES.

Lord LYNDHURST called attention to the state of the naval reserve, and invited the Government to give an account of its present condition and probable future progress. It appeared that foreigners were better acquainted with the state of our Navy than we were ourselves. Since the great Continental war our Navy had been comparatively neglected, and it was only from alarm at the enormous efforts of France that our Government at last roused itself from its supineness. The noble and learned Lord compared the British with the French naval force, contending that at present our own scarcely exceeded that of our rival. After enumerating the naval stations in which it was necessary that we should sustain our supremacy at sea, he observed that a disaster in the Channel could be repaired by France, but would be ruinous to England. The country could not rest satisfied while matters remained in their present position. He also quoted the authority of successive Lords of the Admiralty to show the difficulty which had been experienced in finding men for the Navy without resorting to impressment. The regulations of the service also tended to discourage seamen from joining, for they were so numerous and complex that a lawyer even could not understand them. If he himself were of the proper age, and prepared to enter the Navy, his first step would be to call in a respectable conveyancer to prepare an abstract of those regulations. He reprobated the efforts of political economists to keep down the expenditure of the Army and Navy in the vain hope of a perpetual alliance with France.

The Duke of SOMERSET trusted that it would not be supposed from the speech of the noble and learned Lord that the present Government had reduced the naval strength of the country. During the last eight months more men had been employed in the dockyards than during any previous period—not excepting those of the great Continental war. Exclusive of blockships or sailing-vessels we had afloat 50 ships of the line, 80 frigates, 19 corvettes, 83 sloops, 26 smaller vessels, and 24 special and 350 ordinary gun-boats. The French had 33 ships of the line and eight building, 33 frigates and 12 building, and about 140 sloops. As for our naval reserve, the coastguard now numbered 6802 men, and it was intended to increase it to 12,000 men. The naval coastguard volunteers amounted to upwards of 7000. There were but 1000 men in the naval reserve; but the scheme could scarcely be said to have as yet come into operation. The actual available reserve was 14,850 men. As to the regulations, they referred to different classes, and all that applied to common seamen could be comprised in a single sheet of paper. The noble Duke concluded by praising the high spirit of the Navy, which, however it might show itself dissatisfied with petty expeditions, would never be found wanting upon great occasions.

After a short discussion the subject dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

MANNING THE NAVY.

Sir CHARLES NAPIER moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty expressing the regret of the House that, instead of a reserve of 70,000 men, as contemplated by the Manning Commission, there were only 6362 coastguard men, including officers, 1900 district ships' companies, 1400 revenue men, 600 cruisers' men, and 5000 or 6000 coast volunteers; that, as a vote of the House had unanimously decided that the report of the Manning Commission ought to be carried out, the House prayed her Majesty would give directions that the coastguard should be completed to 12,000 seamen, as recommended by the Commission, ready to be placed in efficient ships at the several ports, instead of the present blockships, thus constituting a reserve of ten sail of the line ready for any emergency; that the number of naval volunteers, now under 1000, should be completed as soon as possible, and the other recommendations of the Commission complied with; and that the House was also of opinion that the bounty for able seamen ought not to have been lowered till the required number was complete. The hon. and gallant gentleman repeated the speech which he had made on several occasions during the present and former Sessions.

Sir J. ELPHINSTONE seconded the motion.

Lord C. PAGET opposed the motion, which, he said, was founded upon a series of those misconceptions into which the hon. and gallant gentleman occasionally fell. With regard to the recommendations of the Commissioners on Manning the Navy, the Admiralty were most anxious to adopt them as far as practicable. Having detailed what had already been done in that direction, the noble Lord stated that there was a naval reserve of 1000 men, while the coastguard consisted of a force of 6632 men, exclusive of 476 marines, the whole of whom would be available in case of emergency. There was also a body of 1381 civilians, who, although not sailors, would be useful. The Admiralty were daily adding to the coastguard, which they would be glad to increase to 12,000 if Sir Charles Napier could only tell them how to accomplish it.

Sir J. PAKINGTON concurred with the noble Lord in thinking that the House ought not to agree to the motion, although he was glad it had been made, as it had elicited a satisfactory statement from the Secretary to the Admiralty.

Sir M. SEYMOUR complained that our legislation of late years, especially the repeal of the navigation laws, had tended to discourage the growth of seamen, while the superior advantages held out by the United States' Navy tempted many of our best sailors into that service.

The discussion was continued by Mr. Corry, Sir George Pechell, Admiral Walcott, Mr. Bentinck, and Lord Lovaine.

Sir C. NAPIER, in replying, taunted Lord Clarence Paget with having taken exception to his speeches on the ground that they did harm to the service, and reminded the noble and gallant Lord that he had himself repeatedly assured him at the Admiralty that his speeches had done a great deal of good, and that he hoped he would go on with them.

The motion was then withdrawn.

BERWICK-ON-TWEED ELECTION.

Mr. F. PEEL moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty praying that she would be pleased to appoint a commission to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at the last election for the borough of Berwick. The right hon. gentleman said that, although the inquiry before the Select Committee had not been completed, still there was reason to believe that gross and systematic bribery had been carried on.

Mr. MARJORIBANKS defended himself and his constituents against the allegation of Mr. Peel, and said that he had given a promise that he would not be a party to any corrupt practices; in proof of which he referred to the fact that his election had cost only £432. He and his constituents were quite willing to meet the most searching investigation.

Mr. MACAULAY thought there was not sufficient evidence of extensive bribery to warrant the House in acceding to the motion. The only proof brought before the Committee was that three or four freemen had received a few pounds each from the hands of a person who was not shown to be an agent of the sitting member.

Lord R. CECIL (a member of the Berwick Committee) gave it as his opinion that enough had been proved to justify inquiry. At the same time, he feared that a commission of inquiry would do little good in this or other cases, as the only remedy would be to deprive the offending boroughs of representation for a whole generation.

Mr. BRIGHT expressed himself in favour of issuing the commission, as, if not, the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act might as well be repealed.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL supported the motion, and said he had already given instructions for the prosecution of some of the persons engaged in corrupt practices at the late election for Berwick.

Mr. HUNT suggested that in all cases in which a commission should report that the electors of any borough had been guilty of corrupt practices, the expense of the inquiry should fall upon the inhabitants as a penalty for their offence.

Lord PALMERSTON said that, in his opinion, the motion was a very proper one, more especially at the present time, when the House was engaged in the duty of endeavouring to improve the representation of the people. He hoped that for the character of the House the motion would be agreed to, and that no weight would attach to the flimsy arguments of those who wished to prevent the exposure and punishment of the guilty parties.

After some further discussion

The motion was agreed to without a division; as also a motion that the Attorney-General be directed to prosecute William M'Gall for bribery.

MISCELLANEOUS.

In answer to Mr. Fenwick, Lord J. RUSSELL said he was not in a position to lay on the table the correspondence relating to the abolition of the Stade Dues, as the matter was still under discussion.

Mr. LAING stated, in reply to a question put by Sir Stafford Northcote, that the commission of inquiry at the General Post Office was temporarily suspended, with a view to widen the sphere of its labours.

Mr. SEYMOUR FITZGERALD asked whether it was true, as reported in the proceedings of the House of Lords, that the conference of European Powers on the subject of the annexation of Savoy and Nice had been postponed. The hon. gentleman also asked whether the bases of the conference had yet been decided on.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL replied that what had been stated in the House of Lords was that the time for the conference was not yet fixed, as the Sardinian Parliament had not yet sanctioned the annexation. He could not tell when the bases of the conference would be agreed upon by the European Powers.

Mr. CARDWELL obtained leave to bring in a bill for taking the census of Ireland.

The Attorneys, Solicitors, Proctors, and Certified Conveyancers Bill was considered in Committee, and several verbal amendments introduced.

On the motion for proceeding with the adjourned debate on the Representation of the People Bill, Lord PALMERSTON hoped that the debate would be concluded on Thursday next. If any further adjournment should be proposed, he should feel it to be his duty to take the sense of the House against it. The debate was then adjourned till Thursday.

The Customs Bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The Malicious Injuries to Property Act Amendment Bill was read a second time.

The Fisheries (Scotland) Bill passed through Committee.

Mr. HENNESSY moved the second reading of the Land Improvement (Ireland) Bill, and quoted a variety of statistics to show that the unsettled state of the land question in that country was inducing a system of emigration which must in the end entail the most dangerous consequences to the social and material prosperity of the empire. The hon. gentleman had not proceeded far in his speech before the hour for adjourning the debate arrived.

The Bank of Ireland Bill was read a second time.

AGGRAVATED ASSAULTS.

Lord RAYNHAM moved the second reading of the Aggravated Assaults Acts Amendment Bill, the object of which was, he said, to prevent the repetition of those savage assaults so frequently perpetrated on women and children. By the law as it now existed the maximum punishment within the power of a magistrate to inflict was six months' imprisonment with hard labour. It was now proposed to give the magistrate a discretionary power to order corporal punishment to the extent of fifty lashes for the first offence, with twelve months' imprisonment, and 150 lashes on a repetition of the offence.

Mr. CLIVE opposed the bill on the part of the Government, and contended that, even if the Legislature were to sanction it, it would be practically inoperative, as the severity of the punishments which it proposed to inflict woul deter persons from prosecuting and magistrates from convicting. He moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day three months.

Mr. E. JAMES seconded the amendment.

Mr. D. GRIFFITH called attention to the anomaly that men upon whom the country relied for protection in the hour of danger, and who were to maintain its honour against all comers, were to be exposed to the degrading punishment of the lash, while persons who so forgot their manhood as to ill-treat women and children were to be protected.

Mr. VANCE gave unqualified support to the bill, which he believed might be improved in Committee.

Mr. HENLEY contended that the bill was not called for by any increase in the number of offences against which it was directed. If the summary power which was recently confided to the magistrates had proved ineffectual, the proper course would be to send offenders before a jury, to be dealt with by them. He was opposed to the principle of the bill, and could not consent to the second reading in the mere hope that it could be amended in Committee.

Mr. DILLWYN thought a good case had been made out in favour of the bill. He would support it, because he approved of the application of corporal punishment as perhaps the only remedy against the commission of brutal attacks upon the most helpless portion of the community.

Mr. SOTHERTON-ESTCOURT expressed his opinion that the bill would do more harm than good.

Sir G. C. LEWIS said that the noble Lord had failed to make out any case to justify Parliament in legislating further in this direction. He had not proved that the number of offences had increased, or that the penalties were insufficient to deter offenders. It was no uncommon thing for wives whose husbands were in prison for assaults upon them to petition the Home Office to remit the remaining portion of their sentences, on the ground that while they suffered the family starved.

Mr. CONINGHAM desired to see all corporal punishment abolished, and should therefore oppose the bill.

After a few few words from Mr. Brady and Colonel North in support of the bill,

Mr. WALTER said he would oppose it—not for the sake of the man, but for that of the woman.

Some further debate ensued, and, on a division, the second reading was carried by 100 to 85.

SELLING AND HAWKING GOODS ON SUNDAY.

Lord CHELMSFORD, in moving the Committee upon this bill, said its objects were not to compel the people to observe the Sabbath religiously, not to impose any new restraints upon the people, but rather to render the Sunday Trading Act more officacious, by the enforcement of stronger penalties. His bill had been prayed for by the great majority of those who would be affected by it, inasmuch as it would enable them to enjoy that real tranquillity upon the Lord's Day which they so much desired, without any detriment to their pecuniary interests. The measure proposed that between the hours of nine o'clock a.m. and one o'clock p m., no shops should be allowed to be open for business or trading purposes; and that no hawking of goods, nor cries for the sale of them, should be permitted throughout the day (with certain exceptions set forth in the bill). Penalties for the breach of any of the provisions of the bill might be recovered by a summary process before any police magistrate.

Earl ST. GERMANS moved, that the bill be committed on that day six months, as he believed, and was informed by Sir Richard Mayne, that it would be perfectly impossible for the police to perform efficiently the duties imposed on them by the bill.

Lord TEYNHAM opposed the bill.

The Bishop of LONDON warmly urged their Lordships to go into Committee upon the bill.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH was opposed to going into Committee, believing that the provisions of the bill were utterly impracticable to carry out.

The Earl of DERBY argued in favour of the bill.

After a lengthened discussion the House divided. The result was a majority of 54 against 25 in favour of going into Committee.

Their Lordships having gone into Committee, it was soon afterwards agreed to postpone the further consideration of the clauses until next Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

WAKEFIELD ELECTION.—In answer to Mr. E. James, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL said he had given instructions that in the first instance a criminal information should be filed against Mr. Charlesworth and Mr. Leatham, the candidates at the last election, who were the chief offenders, and then against the persons who abetted them (Cheers).

SAN JUAN.—Mr. FITZGERALD asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he was prepared to give the House any information as to the present position of the negotiations between this country and the United States, with reference to the Island of San Juan; and whether he had any objection to lay the correspondence with the United States Government on that subject upon the table of the House?—Lord J. RUSSELL said her Majesty's Government made a proposition in August last, which was refused by the American Government, who stated over again the claim they had previously made. Her Majesty's Government had received a despatch from General Cass, and he did not think that he could lay the correspondence on the table until they had considered their reply to it.

THE REFORM BILL.

Mr. MACAULAY renewed the debate on the Reform in the Representation Bill, directing attention, in the first place, to the necessity of a variety of franchise to an efficient Reform Bill. They wanted to have other statistics than those of the gross number of occupiers before they could form any adequate opinion of the intelligence of the men upon whom they now proposed to confer the privilege of the franchise. He complained of the bill of the noble Lord because it was uniform, instead of various, to suit the exigencies of the various boroughs throughout the country. He was in favour of a multiform franchise, and a multiform qualification with regard with constituencies themselves. He should like to see a personal test whereby the intelligence of the electors might be ascertained. The hon. member for Birmingham had stated at a meeting in the country that he was in favour of a rating suffrage; but he told the people whom he addressed that he should not hesitate to go with them eventually for manhood, household, or universal suffrage (Mr. Bright, "No"). Entertaining these views, he should have voted on an amendment if it had been proposed; but he thought the debate had justified the foresight of those who preferred a free discussion to a party division. He sincerely trusted that the Government would reconsider the measure, for it could not be thought that such a bill could be carried with a high hand through Parliament.

Mr. GREGORY (having been called on by the Speaker) said he thought that forty out of fifty members on that (the Ministerial) side of the House viewed the measure with disapprobation and alarm. There were, he thought, more anomalies in this bill than there were in the present system, and that the measure would furnish the advocates of electoral districts with ten times stronger arguments than he could at present use. He objected mainly to the bill because it involved no principle of permanence. He objected to it generally on account of its democratic tendency.

Mr. LONGFIELD also opposed the bill, and was proceeding with his observations when he was interrupted by an attempt on the part of an hon. member to count out the House. In consequence, however, of a rush of members into the House, upon the sound of the bell, the attempt proved abortive and the debate proceeded.

Mr. DIGBY SEYMOUR defended the right of the working classes to the possession of the franchise, and argued that the fear of the results of democracy as experienced in America was altogether illusory. On the whole, he thought that the bill would be more satisfactory if its principle of the redistribution of seats were extended in Committee.

Sir J. RAMSDEN expressed his regret that the Government had not framed such a measure as would be more likely to command the general support. On the one side of the House the bill was denounced as dangerous, whilst on the other it was condemned for its shortcomings, and was only tolerated as a step towards something of a more decided character. It was, therefore, much to be feared that this measure would never be accepted, even by its supporters, as a settlement of the question. To such a bill he would be no party, for it would be better to do nothing than to pass a measure of this delusive character—one unworthy of Parliament and menacing to the national interests.

Mr. WALPOLE expressed his surprise that the noble Lord (Lord J. Russell) should have proposed a franchise that militated against the known principles of the British Constitution, and one which he was convinced must end in establishing throughout the country a homogeneous qualification which, if once spread throughout the kingdom, would necessarily introduce into the House of Commons one class of members instead of the counterbalancing variety which they had at present. Another effect of this bill would be to dissever taxation and representation through the operation of the Compound Householders' Act upon houses below an £8 rental, while the payment of poor rates would continue to be a necessary adjunct to a higher rental for the exercise of the franchise. The low franchise proposed would also raise a class of voters, who, by their poverty, would be more or less liable to be influenced in the exercise of their franchise by money or power. The measure was one which would enlarge the constituency, but deteriorate the quality. It would place wealth and intelligence at the mercy of poverty and passion—that wealth which employs, and that intelligence which ought to govern.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER vindicated the conduct and consistency of his noble friend (Lord J. Russell) and the Government upon this question of reform. They had now been six nights engaged in the discussion of this measure—a duration of time without precedent in reference to a proposition against which there was no amendment moved. The bill was brought forward in obedience to pledges—pledges, indeed, that had been given by the two great parties in this House. What was the value of those pledges if they did not proceed with this bill, but suffered it to be treated in this manner not only night after night, but week after week? With respect to the bill itself he believed that he could show that the apprehensions of its opponents were doubly and trebly exaggerated; and although a great deal might be said in favour of the different franchises that had been suggested, they were, nevertheless, novel, and therefore difficult. It was the duty of the Government, in dealing with so important a subject, to aim at what was practical as well as simple, in order that amendments and improvements might as easily as possible be engrafted upon it. The Government did not approach the subject with the feeling that the present system had failed—nay, rather they felt that it conferred great benefit on the question for which it had existed; but it was admitted to be capable of improvement, and it was their desire and object to improve it. He therefore, after the pledges which had been given, after the expectations which had been raised, must warn hon. gentlemen opposite of the danger of further and unnecessary delay. The objections which had been raised with respect to the "lodger" or other franchises were all matters more proper for a Committee, and they could better discuss them at that stage than they were now doing in listening to individual opinions on this side and on that side of the House, without giving effect to the practical decision of the House. The right hon. gentleman then proceeded to notice the objections to the £6 franchise, which appeared to be the great offending feature of the bill. He ridiculed the fears of those who thought that that franchise would have the effect of deteriorating the constituencies of this country, and contended, on the contrary, that the class of voters created by the bill were, by their position and intelligence, fully as capable of exercising the franchise as independently as many of the shopkeeping electors in our boroughs. As to the augmentation which it was alleged by the opponents of the bill the £6 franchise would create, he quoted some returns to show that by migration alone more than 25 per cent of this class of people changed their residences within the period required by the bill in order to qualify them to vote. 165,000 was the prima facie addition which would be given to the present constituency of the country; but a considerable reduction must be made from that number from the nonpayment of rates, migration, and other causes; therefore the apprehensions entertained of the £6 electors becoming so numerous as to swamp the representation of property and station in that House were utterly unfounded and delusive.

Mr. COLLINS, amid the impatience of the House, opposed the bill.

The bill was ultimately read a second time without a division.

The 4th of June was appointed for Committee on the bill.

MUSIC.

At HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE Mdlle. Piccolomini has appeared three times previously to her final retirement from the stage. These farewell appearances took place on Thursday and Saturday last week and on Monday last. She performed only one character, the heroine of a new opera by Signor Campana, entitled "Almina," a work which has been received with considerable favour. Its subject may be briefly explained. Almina, the daughter of an Italian nobleman, is about to be married, and the piece opens with the wedding festivities. But the bride is melancholy. She has been betrothed to a former lover, who is supposed to have died in a foreign land; and she is unfaithful to his memory only in compliance with the urgent entreaties of her aged father. She sinks, however, under the struggle; and when her lost lover reappears, he finds that she has married another, but has died of grief for his loss. When she has been committed to the tomb, her lover descends into the vault to indulge his sorrow by mourning over her remains. But Almina is not dead. She has only swooned; and, in a state of insensibility resembling death, has been carried to her grave. She now suddenly revives, rises from the tomb, and stands before her lover, who is overcome with awe and wonder, feelings immediately succeeded by mutual rapture. The pair, holding that all bonds are broken by her virtual death, and their almost miraculous restoration to each other, resolve to fly together and repair to some distant country. Five years pass away, and Almina and her partner are seized with the desire of returning home, hoping that they will remain unknown. But they are disappointed: Almina is recognised, and her husband claims her as his wife. A trial takes place in a court of justice, where the lady denies her identity, and not only asserts, but swears that she is a stranger, and her companion's wife. The proof, however, is too strong, and the court gives judgment that she must quit her paramour and return to her husband. To avoid this result she swallows poison, and expires in her lover's arms. The moral of this tale is questionable, and the story is not very probable or coherent; but it affords striking scenes and situations; and the catastrophe, thanks to the acting of Piccolomini and Giuglini, was very affecting. Signor Campana seems to belong to the school of Verdi: his music has the faults and the merits of that most popular of modern composers. The voices of the singers are often strained beyond their powers, and oppressed with a load of noisy accompaniments; there is a lack of novelty and variety; and the concerted pieces and choruses betray a deficiency of constructive skill. But, with all this, there is a great deal of pleasing melody, and some of the principal airs may probably become popular when transferred from the stage to the drawing-room. This opera, in short, if not a chef-d'œuvre, is the work of an accomplished musician, which Signor Campana, by his vocal pieces already known to the public, has shown himself to be.

It was after the third performance of this opera (as we have said) that Mdlle. Piccolomini took her last farewell, not only of the English public but of the stage. She has always been a favourite among us—a favourite of the public from her captivating powers as an artist, and a favourite in society from her good and amiable qualities as a lady. As the wife of an Italian gent'eman, she is about to retire into the shades of private life, where, we trust, she will find a degree of happiness far beyond that which is derived from the intoxicating breath of popular applause.

At the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA Auber's "Fra Diavolo" was reproduced on Tuesday in the Italian dress in which it was clothed by the composer himself expressly for this theatre. The performance was similar to that of two years ago, with two important exceptions—Bosio was replaced in the character of Zerlina by Miolan-Carvalho; and Marai, as Lady Pamela, by Corbari. Gardoni, as before, was the brigand-hero; Ronconi, the ridiculous Englishman, Baron Rocburgh; Neri-Baraldi, the young officer; and Zelger and Tagliafico the two comic bandits. Thus the cast was by no means diminished in excellence. Miolan-Carvalho played the rustic heroine with infinite sprightliness and grace, and sang with indescribable brilliancy. Ronconi's exhibition of the "humours" of a Milord Anglais on his travels was a most laughable extravaganza; and Corbari was excellent as his sentimental spouse. Gardoni, in personating Fra Diavolo, ought to have had a little more of the devil in him. He appears a very handsome, polite, insinuating young gentleman, but he forgets that he is at bottom a fierce, ruthless ruffian. However, his exquisite singing makes amends for all. As a whole, this most attractive opera is magnificently got up and delightfully performed.

The MONDAY POPULAR CONCERT of this week was made up of choice materials. The first piece was an object of interest—a string-instrument quartet of Dussek hitherto unknown in this country. Dussek, though his music had almost fallen into oblivion among us, is now recognised as one of the first composers of his day. He was a great pianist, and his compositions for that instrument have lately regained even more than their original vogue; but his other works have always remained comparatively unknown. This quartet is one of a set numbered as op. 61, and is well worthy of his name. It was exquisitely played by Messrs. Becker, Ries, Doyle, and Piatti, and the audience seemed to listen to it with delight. Another object of interest was Mozart's sonata in B flat for the piano and violin, played by Hallé and Becker. This is the sonata of which the well-known anecdote is told. Mozart wrote it for a celebrated female violinist, who, giving a concert at Vienna, begged something from his pen. He composed this sonata, but only in his mind, delaying, according to his procrastinating habit, the task of putting it on paper till it was too late to write down any more than the violin part, which he sent to the lady. The concert came; the sonata was superbly played, and received with acclamations; but the Emperor, in his box over the heads of the performers, saw that Mozart had nothing before him but a sheet of blank paper. The Emperor, beckoning Mozart to him, said in a half whisper, "So, Mozart, you are at your old tricks again!" "Yes, sire," said Mozart, with a smile of triumph and confusion, "but there has not been a note lost." This sonata is one of his most charming productions. Besides these pieces, which were curious as well as beautiful, the concert included Beethoven's sonata for the piano alone, in D, played by Hallé; the same composer's trio in E flat for violin, viola, and violoncello, played by Becker, Doyle, and Piatti; and several classical vocal pieces, sung by Sims Reeves and Mdme. Sainton-Dolby.

The concert of the MUSICAL UNION, on Tuesday morning, was not less excellent. It consisted of Mozart's seventh quartet in D, Spohr's pianoforte trio in E minor, and Beethoven's quintet in C, op. 20. Becker was the first violin, Piatti the violoncello, and Hallé the pianist. In addition to these things Hallé played several of the "Lieder ohne Worte," of Mendelssohn. St. James's Hall was crowded to the doors.

We understand that, by the kind permission of E. T. Smith, Esq., the Vocal Association have secured the services of some of the principal artists of Her Majesty's Theatre at their next subscription concert, Wednesday, May 16. Signor Mongini will be the principal tenor, and Signor Everardi principal basso.

THE THEATRES, &c.

STANDARD.—Mr. Charles Dillon commenced a starring engagement on Monday in "Belphegor." His performance continues to be marked by those pathetic points which first obtained for him celebrity. On Wednesday he appeared as Claude Melnotte in "The Lady of Lyons," with Miss Marriott as Pauline. To this succeeded Mr. W. Marston's elegant interlude of "A Hard Struggle," which proved remarkably effective. Its little heroine was played by Miss Benson with charming naiveté.

NEW ADELPHI.—On Monday Mr. Leigh Murray reappeared at this theatre in the part of M. Tourbillon in Mr. Tom Taylor's drama, "To Parents and Guardians," He was warmly received, and acted with distinguishable ability. Miss Julia Daly, who some short time since appeared at Drury Lane as an aspirant in the Yankee-girl class of character, has also been engaged, and acted as "Our Female American Cousin" with considerable effect. She may be accepted as a quieter specimen of the eccentric style required in these local impersonations.

CITY OF LONDON.—A new actor, as a metropolitan star, made his appearance as Hamlet on Monday—Mr. T. C. King, formerly of the Princess's, and lately of the Dublin Theatre. Mr. King has arrived in London with a very high reputation; and certainly his provincial practice has qualified him for taking an eminent position on the boards His organ is one of the finest we have heard, his declamation most impressive, and his action picturesque and pleasing. With such excellent matériel, it would be hard indeed if Mr. King did not achieve a large degree of success. As he becomes more known he will be better appreciated.

THE FARM.

THE great question as to the Yorkshire destination of the Royal Show in 1860 was settled last Wednesday in favour of Leeds. Such rivalry has never been excited before, and the voting presented a very strange contrast to last year, when only a solitary individual voted for Guildford against Canterbury. It was generally understood beforehand that York, Harrogate, and Wakefield stood not a ghost of a chance, and that Hull had only a very outside one. Its trial-ground was far too far from the town, while the prospect of an inundation of foreigners did not make up for its distance from the great manufacturing towns; and it was, moreover, almost impossible that the Society, after paying York the first compliment in 1848, could pass over the West Riding at "the second time of asking." Doncaster, from its admirable accommodation in every respect, had very fair hopes of beating its big rival; but the latter came out in such tremendous earnest, and, giving up its original plan, selected, at a great expense, such a beautiful site for the show, near the ruins of Kirkstall Abbey, that it was deservedly first favourite when the polling began. Harrogate and Wakefield could not muster a solitary supporter. The proposition from the former was looked upon as a mere lodging-house speculation, and, of course, it was idle to vote for the latter when its neighbour Leeds was in the field. The strength of the other four was as follows:—Leeds, twenty-eight; Doncaster, twenty; Hull, fifteen; York, four; and, when at the third trial it became a question simply of Leeds v. Doncaster, "the capital of the West Riding" had it all its own way. From the determination they have shown to win, it is pretty certain that the Leeds people will not give the society such a half-hearted reception as they had at Warwick; but the sooner they pass a reform bill for their inns the better. Their deputation, by-the-by, was capitally got up; and their Mayor formed a defensive alliance against Hull and Doncaster for the day, with the Mayors of Bradford, Halifax, and Ripon.

Mr. Godfrey Wentworth's sale was not a very good one. The Woolley farm land is hardly strong enough for shorthorns; and the absence of spring grass, which is still sadly retarded by frosty nights and cold dry winds by day, tended to depress buyers. One cow, Kate Coventry, fetched 40 gs. Mr. Walsh, of Trough House, Limerick, sold off his shorthorns last week; and his cow Sweetheart (who was second to Rosette at the last Dublin show) fetched 203 gs. She was bred by Mr. Grundy, and, after being third to Diadem and Queen of the Isles in the celebrated yearling heifer class at the Chester Royal was sold in the yard that day for, we believe, 170gs., to Mr. Douglas of Athelstaneford, and went from his hands to Ireland. Mr. Barnes has declined the Railway Cup which he won at Dublin last month with his bull Dr. M'Hale, as the conditions were too stringent, and more suited to the days when there were scarcely two good shorthorn bulls in Ireland, and it was necessary, by hook or by crook, to retain them in the country. How they have been keeping their cattle alive in many parts of Ireland is a mystery, as hay is at £12 a ton, and often not to be got for love or money. Last Saturday, however, a change took place, and two days of consecutive rain "made the country look £3 per acre better." Decimation is a very mild term to apply to the cattle deaths; and it is also said that in the northern parts of Northumberland Mr. Cookson's hounds gave up hunting sooner on account of the number of dead sheep lying about the fields. The extra straw of England, mixed with oilcake, has stood it in good stead at this pinch. We hear that 180 gs. was refused by Captain Spencer at Dublin for his yearling heifer Bloom, which he purchased as a calf for 110 gs. at Mr. Wetherell's sale; and it is worth recording that at the last Lincoln fair, 160 hoggets belonging to Mr. William Greetham, jun., with a dash of Aylesby blood on Lincolnshire, made £4 5s. a piece.

A writer in the Cornhill Magazine suggests the establishment of an Order of Britannia as a reward for the display of science, skill, bravery, fortitude in trying circumstances, resource in danger, &c., in the Royal Navy and merchant service.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Last week the births of 914 boys and 885 girls—in all 1799 children—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-59 the average number was 1650.—The deaths in London last week were 1268, showing a slight decrease on those of the previous week, and a considerable decrease on those registered in the earlier half of April. Still, the deaths were more numerous by 85 than they would have been if the average rate of mortality had prevailed. Of six nonagenarians who died in the week one was a man aged 91 years; the rest were widows, aged respectively 90, 94, 95, 97, and 98 years.

A SALE OF RARE BOOKS took place during last week at Haarlem. Among them was a copy of "Les Chroniques de Monstrelet," 3 vols. folio, printed (circa 1500) by Verard, on vellum, with upwards of one hundred and fifty illuminations in gold and colours. This copy is said once to have been sold for 34 florins, but now at 6150 florins it was secured by Mr. Toovey. The only other copy of the three volumes that is known to exist is that in the Imperial Library, Paris. The British Museum possesses only vols. 1 and 3: these formerly belonged to Henry VII. The finest copies known of the emblems by Withers, as also those by Cats, with his other works, were in the collection.

THE GUN-BOATS AT HASLAR.—The Times' Portsmouth correspondent writes to reiterate his statements with reference to the gun-boats at Haslar. He did not refer, he says, to the vessels built by those firms which have addressed letters to the Times. "The four boats on the condition of which I framed my report I will call by numbers—1, 2, 3, and 4. The repairs to No. 1 are for the present suspended, a special report having been made of her condition. This is the boat whence were extracted the short copper bolts. No. 2, like No. 1, has her repairs suspended for the present, and is also, in a similar manner to No 1, stripped of her planking. No. 3 is partly repaired; but her defects have been little short of those of Nos. 1 and 2. Not only, as I have before stated, are the majority of the timbers of Nos. 1, 2, and 3 liberally marked with 'sap,' but in several instances they have been barely squared, and plainly show the growth of the wood. Plank with the 'sap' on it has not only been used freely, but the faulty side of it has been bolted next to the vessel's framing, and communicated its rot to the timber of the vessel itself. The planking on the outside thus presenting a hard, firm appearance, has been found one of the most difficult points to deal with; and I am assured on competent authority that this great evil in the construction of the vessels has proved to be the 'rule,' and not the 'exception.'"

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.—It is understood that the Attorney-General will modify his new Bankruptcy Bill to meet the main suggestions of the commercial body, expressed through the Mercantile Law Amendment Society. In its original form the bill provided that a sale under execution should have the effect of an act of bankruptcy, and the sheriff, consequently, would have been deterred from paying the proceeds to the judgment creditor. That functionary, however, is now to be at liberty to do so at the end of seven days after sale, unless he has notice of petition for adjudication; and subsequently, unless a petition for adjudication be presented within sixty days after the sale, the execursion creditor is not to be liable to refund the amount to the assignees—the Act of Bankruptcy, in fact, not dating till that period. Another amendment gives power to the majority of creditors to remove the proceedings to the County Court, whatever may be the extent of the estate, the original proposal having been that this facility should only exist in cases where the assets would not exceed £1000. At the same time a reduction is to be made in the stamp upon petition for adjudication. The intended charge was £10, with a proviso that £5 should be returned should the assets prove below £300. The amount is now to be £3, subject to an increase for estates over £1000. Finally, it has been agreed that creditors' assignees shall be selected from the creditors, and that they are to have authority to appoint a manager to wind up the estate for them, and who is to be paid out of the receipts.—The Times (City Article).

THE VOLUNTEERS OF ENGLAND

A PATRIOTIC SONG AND CHORUS.

WORDS BY ROSALIND. MUSIC BY HENRY RUSSELL.

II.

We now are strong in number;
And if war should come again
Our native shores to sully,
Our force shall not be vain.
Whatever foes attack us,
Oh, we will strive to prove

The bulwarks, then, of safety
To the island home we love!
Oh, then, be up and ready,
Before our foes appear:
Let every man in England
Be now a volunteer.

For in the cause of freedom
Shall our banner be unfurled;
With "Liberty" our war-cry
We may defy the world.
But long may Britain flourish
Ere the day of war appears,

When she shall need to summon
To arms her volunteers.
Now, let's be up and doing,
That when that day is near,
We find each man in England
A gallant volunteer.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

CHESTER has held undisputed sway during the past week, and the Roodee has been duly patronised by the heroes of the "Battle of Farnborough," whose "hug" on that memorable morning did not tend to enlarge their bumps of mutual esteem. In the Grosvenor Stakes Promised Land led in his old style from end to end, and Avalanche had not a ghost of a chance with him. Mr. Eastwood's beatiful Oaks mare, Butterfly, won her Palatine Stakes race cleverly. Traducer was more suited as to distance in the Wynnstay Handicap than the Two Thousand, and Big Ben who has gradually run himself into condition since Northampton, followed up his Newmarket victory in the Mostyn Stakes. The Chester Cup proved a mere canter for St. Alban's (5st. 3lb.), about whom 5 to 1 was at once taken for the Derby. The twenty-nine starters were not drawn in ranks, and there were nearly a dozen false starts; and the winner made such strong running from end to end that before half the distance was traversed half the field were hopelessly out of the race. Petra justified the truth of her very high trial with Promised Land by running second, and Longrange was last but one. The winner is also in the St. Leger. Last year he only ran twice, and was sixth to Mainstone at Stockbridge, and third to Winton for The Ham. This is the first time that a three-year old has won the Chester Cup, carrying upwards of 5st.; and his performance, like that of The Wizard, is likely to create some lively competition for the two great stud cracks at Grimston next month. It is said that Buccaneer is gone to Woolcot, and not to William Butler's, as Newmarket rumour had it.

Doncaster promises a merry Spring Meeting on Tuesday and Wednesday next. Out of sixty-two, no less than forty-three accepted for the Spring Handicap (although five have since paid), which is to be run on Tuesday; and the Hopeful Stakes, on the same day, is likely to bring out, as of yore, a large field of youngsters. York takes up the tale on Thursday and Friday. Sweetsauce, Homeward Bound, Rattlebone, Stockton, Paleface, and Restes are in the Spring St. Leger; and Butterfly, High Treason, and Thormanby, in the Biennial, for which we should fancy that neither of the latter are likely to go. The Zetland Stakes entries include Walloon and Folkestone, each with that strange penalty of 2lb., which only seems to linger at York. The Salisbury Meeting is on the same two days; but Malton, which might have given such a fine finishing touch to the Yorkshire week, has disapeared from the scene.

The United All England Eleven commence their season on May 14 at Sheffield, and on May 28 the two Elevens meet for the fray at Lord's. Tarrant, a promising young player from Cambridge, will, it is said, join the All England side on that occasion. June 7, 8, and 9 are the days fixed for the champion eleven to meet another eleven at the Trafford Ground, Manchester. During the present month George Parr is giving the benefit of his professional lectures to Harrow, Jackson to Oxford, and Caffyn to Winchester.

There are several changes among whips and huntsmen; and, among others, we hear that James Maiden leaves Mr. Greaves, and goes as whip to Mr. Tailby.

The Cleveland Agricultural Society intend to come out most spiritedly at Middlesborough-on-Tees on the 9th and 10th of August next. The best thoroughbred sire for general stud purposes is to receive a premium of 100 gs; and the second, one of 20 gs. A nobleman or gentleman connected with the turf, an experienced trainer, and a gentleman who has a thorough knowledge of breeding horses, both for hunting and racing purposes, are to be the judges. Prizes of 10 sovs and 5 sovs are to be given to the best hunting and hackney geldings and hunting and hackney mares, not less than four years old, and all of them must jump timber and thorn fences on the ground. The foxhounds are not overlooked, and they are now judiciously divided into three classes—to wit, entered hounds and puppies (one of each sex), and sires not being less than four-season hunters.

Mr. C. H. Pearson, M.A., Professor of Modern History, King's College, London, has been appointed by the Council of the Society of Arts Examiner in English History, in place of Sir Edward S. Creasy, Chief Justice of Ceylon.

The Secretaryship of the Board of Inland Revenue, vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Keogh, is not to be filled up. The two assistant-secretaries, Mr. Dobson and Mr. Sargent, will, in future, act as joint secretaries, and thus an annual saving of £1600 will be effected.

The advocates of the Oxford and Cambridge mission to Central Africa intend to hold a public meeting at the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, on the 24th inst., on which occasion addresses will be delivered by the Bishop of Oxford, Lord Brougham, Archdeacon M'Kenzie, and others.

The Bank of England has decided upon adopting the recommendation for closing at an earlier hour on Saturdays, on after the 19th inst. The business will terminate on Saturdays at three o'clock in the afternoon, instead of four, as at present.

Miss Catherine Sinclair, who presented to the Edinburgh Town Council the first public fountain erected in that city, has given the Council £100 to be expended in the erection of seats in the different thoroughfares, some in the shape of benches, and others little iron seats projecting from lamp-posts, one on each side in the line of the street.

Walter Scott Douglas, whose career of crime is said to have been originally owing to the perusal of "Jack Sheppard," has made a second most daring escape from Newcastle gaol. The details disclose no little negligence on the part of the prison officials. The local magistrates have suspended the deputy governor and turnkey from office till the next Quarter Sessions.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that only a moderate amount of business has been transacted in Home Securities during the present week, both for Money and Time, prices have steadily advanced, and the market has assumed a more favourable appearance. The improved feeling in it is easily accounted for. In the first place, we have had a steady influx of bullion, over £300,000; in the second, a large portion of the gold at hand has been sold to the Bank of England; and, in the third, money for commercial purposes, though in fair demand, has become easier in price.

In Lombard-street the supply of surplus capital has increased to some extent, and the best bills are now taken freely, at the annexed rates:—Short, 4¼ to 4½; three months', 4⅝ to 4½; four months', 4½ to 4¾; and six months', 4¾ to 6 per cent. The payment of the balance of the Victoria loan of £2,650,000, and £234,000 on the South-Western Stock, has produced rather more demand for money in the Stock Exchange; but there has been no anxiety shown in reference to payments falling due on the 4th.

The amount in specie taken out by the present steamer for India is £219,679, wholly on merchants' account. The West India packet carries out £8000 in silver.

The silver market is very flat, at a further decline of 1s. 8d. per ounce, Mexican dollars having sold at 62d. per ounce.

We learn that the Bank of Tennessee, with a capital of £740,000, has stopped payment. This event has produced much surprise here.

Nearly the whole of the foreign exchanges are favourable to this country; however, future exports of bullion are likely to be on a very moderate scale. The stock in the Bank of England is likely to increase during the next three or four weeks. At present it is about £15,000,000.

On the Continent money is still low in price. At Brussels it has been reduced to 3½ per cent.

Some excitement has been observed amongst the holders of Indian Securities in this country, from an announcement to the effect that they are liable to the Indian income tax of four per cent, in addition to that levied in this country. The drafts upon the Indian Treasuries have been reduced from 2s. 0½d. to 1s. 11½d., being the difference of the tax in question. The step is by many persons considered a most injudicious one.

The Grand Trunk Railway of Canada have given notice that they will be prepared to receive tenders on the 9th of May, through Messrs. Capel and Co., for £1,111,500 Preferential Six per Cent Debentures, to bear interest from the 1st of January last at 80. The whole amount is required to pay off a loan, so that there will be no addition to the company's debt. The instalments will extend from the 9th of May to the 26th of June.

Home Stocks were firm on Monday, and prices showed an improvement when compared with Saturday. Consols for Money, were done at 95⅛ ¾; Ditto for Account, 95⅜ ⅝ ¾; The Reduced, 93⅜ ⅝ ¾ ⅝; New Three per Cents, 93⅝ ⅝ ¾ ½; Long Annuities, 1885, 17⅝; India Five per Cents, 106⅝ ½; India Debentures, 1858, 96⅞ 97 96¾; Ditto, 1859, 96¾; Exchequer Bills, 5s. to 9s. prem.; India Enfaced Paper, Five per Cent, was 98½ ½; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103⅞, 104, and 103½. Tuesday was observed as a close holiday. On Wednesday, no change of importance took place in the quotations, and the Market, generally, was less active. Bank Stock marked 225 to 227; India Stock, 219½; Ditto, Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 98⅛; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103 ¾; The Reduced and New Three per Cents realised 93¾ ⅞ ⅝ ¾; Consols for Money, 95¼ ⅝ ½ ½; Ditto for Time, 95⅜ ½ ¾ ½; Exchequer Bills, 6s. to 10s. prem.; India Bonds, 10s. dis.; Long Annuities, 1885, 17 7-16; India Five per Cents, 106½ ¾; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 97½, 97, 97½; Ditto, 1859, 97½. There was very little fluctuation in prices on Thursday:—Consols, for Money and Time, were done at 95½ ⅝; The Reduced and New Three per Cents, 95⅝ ⅞; Exchequer Bills, 6s. to 10s. prem.; Bank Stock was firm, at 226 to 227; India New Loan, 106½ ¾; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent Rupee Paper, 103¾ to 104.

The tendency of prices in the Foreign House has been decidedly an upward one. The amount of business transacted, however, has not been to say extensive, and the leading quotations for the week are as follows:—Austrian Five per Cents, 1859, 73; Brazilian Five per Cents, 99⅝; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 91½; Chilian Six per Cents, 102½; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 97½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66; Mexican Three per Cents, 21⅞ to 22¼; Peruvian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 91⅞; Ditto, Uribarren, 82¾; Peruvian Three per Cents, 69⅝; Portuguese Three per Cents, 44 to 45½; Russian Five per Cents, 108½; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 98; Russian Three per Cents, 67; Sardinian Five per Cents, 86; Spanish Three per Cents, 48; Ditto, New Deferred, 37½; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 77; Ditto New, 61¼; Turkish Four per Cents, 101½. The dealings in the shares of the newly-formed companies have been somewhat restricted:—Ocean Marine Insurance have realised 2⅜ to 2⅞ prem.; Universal Marine, ½ to ⅝ prem.; and London and Provincial Marine, 5-16 to 7-16 prem.

For nearly all Railway Shares the demand has not increased to any extent, even though the traffic receipts continue good; nevertheless prices, almost generally, have ruled somewhat higher. The total "calls" for this month are £1,784,200—£1,500,000 being for South Austrian lines, held chiefly abroad. The following are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (April 30).—To-day's market was rather scantily supplied with English wheat; nevertheless, the demand for both red and white qualities ruled heavy, at a decline in the quotations of fully 1s. per quarter. There was only a limited sale for foreign wheat—the show of which was but moderate—at next to nominal currencies. Floating cargoes of grain were dull, but not cheaper. The barley trade was very firm, and extreme rates were paid for all descriptions of barley. Malt, however, moved off slowly, on former terms. The oat trade ruled steady, at fully last week's currency. Beans advanced 1s. per quarter, and the value of peas was well supported. Flour changed hands slowly, at barely stationary prices.

Prime calves supported previous rates; but inferior veal was dull, and 2d. per 8lb. lower in price. The pork trade was heavy, and the quotations had a drooping tendency. LIMERICK NEW ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL.

THE new Cathedral in Limerick dedicated to St. John the Baptist, of which we present this week to our readers a north-west View, is a noble instance of the pious zeal and generosity of the people of the diocese of Limerick, who have raised, by the united contributions of all classes, at the call of their venerated Bishop, the Right Rev. Dr. Ryan, one of the grandest ecclesiastical buildings ever erected in Ireland. The church is cruciform in plan—having a nave, chancel, transept, and aisles; the aisles being double to the chancel, terminating in chapels. The total internal width across the west end is 74 ft.; and across the east end, including the chapels, 118 ft.; the total length inside being 168 ft.; the height from floor to wall plate is 48 ft.; and the height to apex of roof, 79 ft. The two sacristies are placed behind the chapels, each being 41 ft. by 13 ft. 6 in.; and the tower is placed at the junction of the transept and nave. The architectural details are simple in character, suitable to the hard mountain limestone of the country—the material employed for all the external work, with the exception of the group of sculpture on the west front, representing the "Crucifixion," and the tympanum over the tower doorway, in which will be represented the Blessed Virgin in the attitude which has been adopted to symbolise the "Immaculate Conception," surrounded by angels and by a group of such of the canonised doctors of the Church as have written on the dogma. These groups will be executed in Portland stone. The tower itself is to be erected as a monument to commemorate the dogmatic definition of the Immaculate Conception; and portraits of his present Holiness the Pope; of some of the Irish bishops who were present at the definition; and of Bishop Ryan, the founder of the church, will be introduced in the sculpture. The tower is 37 ft. 6 in. square at base, and 101 ft. 6 in. high to the top of the metal finials of the four pinnacles.

The great feature of the interior will, of course, be the high altar, which is of the ancient form, crowned by a ciborium or canopy of stone, supported on columns of Irish red marble. In the centre, under the canopy, is placed the throne for exposition, approached by a permanent flight of steps behind the altar; and on each side are carved statues of St. John the Baptist, St. Patrick, St. Munchin, first Bishop of Limerick; and of St. Bridget, in attitudes of devotion. The table itself is of Limerick marble, the substructure being of alabaster and coloured marble, adorned in the centre by a group, carved in pure white alabaster, of the sacrifice of Abraham. The canopy is richly vaulted and carved, so that this altar will form, perhaps, the noblest in the kingdom. It will be surrounded on three sides by metal screen, and curtains, but is so placed that the functions performed at it will be visible from all parts of the church. The stonework of the altar has been executed by Mr. White, the sculpture by Mr. Theodore Phyffers. The ceiling above is divided into panels, and will be richly decorated in gold and colour by Mr. Westlake. Only one of the side altars will be completed at present, and that will be decorated by a large painting in oil, by Mr. Russell, representing the Mother of our Lord holding the Divine Child in her arms, and surrounded by angels. This chapel has also a statue of the Blessed Virgin, executed in Rome, the gift of W. Monsell, Esq., M.P.

The church will be opened some time in the approaching summer; but plenty of scope for further generosity will even then be left in the completion of the tower, the three side chapels, the pulpit, font, and other requirements, and the general decoration of the interior. The whole of the works have been erected from the design of M. P. C. Hardwick, the contractor being Mr. Walkes, of Limerick, and the cleric of the works Mr. Attan.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL, LIMERICK.

THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

GIVING their "New" Brethren, as usual, a week's start, the Society (Old) of Painters in Water Colours opened their annual exhibition to private view on Saturday last, and to the public on Monday. Before speaking of the contents of this exhibition we cannot help giving vent to a few expressions of regret upon the miserable dearth of show room in the metropolis, which the history and condition of these two societies, and the art to which they are devoted, display. Excluded from the walls of the Royal Academy by the rules of that establishment, the Water Colourists of England fifty-six years ago took an apartment, approached by a long and steep flight of stairs, in Pall-mall East, for the exhibition of their works, and were speedily acknowledges to be a new institution. In the course of a few years this sole-called "gallery" was found to be much too small for the purpose intended, and a quarter of a century ago a "New" sanity was established, in a "gallery" of its own, at the other extremity of Pall-mall. Again, at a later period, it was discovered that the female artists, who chiefly practise in water colours, could not be accommodated in either of the galleries appropriated to that department of art, and they in turn were compelled to set up an independent exhibition for themselves. The public are thus compelled to visit three distinct establishments, paying three several shillings, and buying as many catalogues before they can see the year's productions in an art peculiarly national; and a divided action, accompanied by unseemly jealousy and rivalry, is maintained between artists who ought to work in common fellowship towards a common end. It was impossible to foresee, in any way thereby, how well-deserved the wish of peers, and bishops, and members of Parliament, and ladies of quality, which filled the two White-hour Galleries on Saturday last, could be realised without having these reflections forced upon the mind, accompanied by a strong conviction of the necessity existing for applying a remedy to an acknowledged and growing evil. If the arts of a country are to be claimed, as some persons have called them, as the property of the nation and not of individuals, it is the duty of the public to provide for their proper accommodation; and the case of the Water-Colour Societies, in common with that of the Royal Academy, of the National Gallery, and of all the art institutions of the kingdom, is that of a retarded action and a hampered development, for want of a commensurate field for their operations. The arts and the art-treasures of England have outgrown their room, and no trust that when any attempt is made to supply it, it may be done upon an adequate scale, and with a due regard to the interests of all.

Looking at the present exhibition, we find that a very similar remark applies to it as that we made of the exhibition of the Old Masters—namely, that its average merit is, if anything, above the average, whilst it contains few, if any, of those brilliant exhibition overage, whilst it contains few, if any, of those brilliant exhibition tours de force—which on some recent occasions seem to have been put forward for the mere object of challenging comparison, disparaging the result, with only a few years' interval. The water-colourists would seem to have settled down resolutely to the practical work of art, satisfied with the fruits of their experience, and cannot well be overrated, and content to get on without resort to expedients which are inconsistent with the true principles of art, and which must only lead to error and disappointment. Thus we are glad to see opaque colours less called into use to heighten effect—a combination incongruous as that of oil colours with water or crystal with plaster of paris; less, also, of scraping and chipping of the paper surface, by which subtlety and sometimes brilliancy are obtained—a realised a temporary glitter at the expense of truth, and with a certainty of ultimate and permanent disfigurement.

We must deal with our survey with premising that the catalogue is rather inconveniently compiled, inasmuch as it contains no index of exhibited works, and the contents are hidden away. We have been compelled occasionally to recur at intervals to the works of the same individual, artist, instead of, as we would prefer, reviewing them at one view.

Near the door we are greeted with a cheerful and spirited interior by G. Dunlop Leslie—"Christmas Revels at Haddon—Bringing in the Yule Log" (7), seen by fire and torch light, and with a very effective and skilful arrangement of contrast. Next to it is a companion piece to "Treport, on the Coast of Normandy" (9), by John Callcot, the title seen in the light in a soft and pearly atmosphere. "Sir Walter Raleigh" is a scene of a grander kind by Arthur Glennie—"View in the Valley of Lauterau, the site of Hoover's Castle, Canton Unterwalden, Mount Lucretia on the left" (10); a truly classic subject, treated with broad and brilliant touch. The companion picture (20), "Early morning, from an opposite locality," is also extremely beautiful. And now, par parenthèse, we are introduced by Mr. O. Oakley to "Scenes of Greenwich Pensioners' Recreations" (11); a group remarkable for intelligent character in the faces, and most conscientious drawing throughout.

Edward Hargitt—whose scene at a shipwreck, with the hurrying down of the life-boat, last year commanded universal and well-merited attention, now exhibits a large picture in a somewhat similar subject—"The Last Man from the Wreck" (14), which is so masterly in composition and execution that we can only express a regret that it does not come up to its predecessor in the exciting interest of the story. As it is, you may study it for an hour or so, and you will discover new matter for admiration in the composition and materials—the bold abruptness of the shelving rock—the wild fury of the foaming sea—the broken spars and fire of the shattered remnants of the wreck, from which "the last man" is being hauled by means of rope ladder—the life-boat in the distance, in which another vessel is seen labouring hopelessly to avoid impending catastrophe—the excited anxiety of the crowd of spectators on shore—all constitute a picture of unusual and stirring interest. Mr. Duncan's skill in the representation of water, and his fine judgment in the introduction of small craft, are well displayed against dark and neutral tints are illustrated with peculiar effect in the present production. "Shipping Intelligence: The Off Liverpool house" (55), and "The Inchcape Bell" (178), by the same artist, are less pretentious works, but of equally considerable merit.

We must pay our respects to another great master in the economy of colour, but who works in a different line of subject—John Gilbert. His dashing equestrian pictures of "Knights of Trumpets and Kettledrums" (21), we see how much may be accomplished with the slight pitches of red and yellow, relieved and toned by masses of grays and neutral tints. Shakespeare's comic heroes and Falstaff in particular, are always favourite subjects with this artist, who treats us to two capital scenes from the adventures of the latter—"Falstaff's Disgust at Being Dragged Sculler," and "Ancient Pistol brings Falstaff Tidings from the Court" (73). But his largest and chief work in the present exhibition, and upon which he has evidently bestowed abundance of pains, is "The Trial of Anne Askew, the Wards in Jarndyce to 'the Lord Chancellor'" (83), from Dickens's "Bleak House," a composition of many figures, great full of necessaries, and abounding in humour.

Joseph Nash, always so much at home in the architectural interiors and mediæval scenes in general, has a cleverly-composed scene of "Commonwealth Troops in Possession of the Chapel of the Dukes of Norfolk, Attached to Arundel Castle" (24). The "Old Parlour" ment is strewed with dismantled armorial honours, church plate, and other furniture, determined with wilful waste by the Puritan zeal of wealth soldiery, a little the worse for a recent encounter; whilst at one side, elevated above the rest, a trooper is seated on a table holding forth in accents of terrible denunciation against backsliders. "The First of May in the Sixteenth Century" (59), by the same, is in a different vein: the quaint procession of morris dancers passing round the Maypole in front of the old-fashioned mansion form a lively and picturesque picture.

S. Read's church and other interiors have a peculiar quality which elevates them above the ordinary run of architectural subjects. He does not exactly display any pretence at poetic treatment in the common sense of the word, which implies falsification of the original; on the contrary, they are remarkable for their truth and scientious truthfulness; but they show in the artist, in an eminent degree, so much of the higher qualities of the poet and painter as to reproduce them with breadth and effect. His largest work, "Interior of the Church of St. Paul, Antwerp" (189), for grandeur and simplicity of general effect, as well as for the careful treatment of the abundant details, leaves nothing to desire. Above all things, we admire in the boldness with which the great expanse of the high-arched roof is given under the influence of an all-pervading light, of which we see no attempt at "cutting up" by the introduction of adventitious tints and shades. The "Tomb of Rubens, in the Church of St. Jacque, Antwerp" (65), with the well-known altar-piece introducing portraits of the great painter and his family, is a little shady of engrossing beauty and interest. "Fountain in the Goose Market, Nuremberg" (67); "Court of Limlithgow Palace" (68); "Corridor in the Brewers' Hall, Antwerp" (161); and "Chapel of the Virgin, in the Church of St. Paul, Antwerp" (170), are amongst other actualities which Mr. Read has dealt with in an equally felicitous manner. In a little picture of "Crosshall Hall" (164), which we engrave, the artist comes out in a different mood—a mood of his own—which he has already frequently indulged in. Here we have the ruined so'itude surrounding a deserted hall, the scene of feudal grandeur in days of yore, with its old-fashioned iron gateway, and moat crossed by a single-arched bridge, the whole quaint forms of long-neglected trees, upon one of the branches of which is perched a stray contemplative raven. Lake and landscapes of Rowsland, this little picture is full of suggestion.

We cannot conclude our first notice without paying homage to Cuyp—the Hague has taught him how to paint, and has inspired even himself in his three most striking exhibits. His large work, "Ruins on the Tower of Brederode, Son, Holland" (1), is dated 1859" (105), is one of the most gorgeous sunlit pictures we ever met with, the magnificent architectural features of the ruins being treated with the highest efforts of historical art.

"SLEIGHING FERNS." BY H. MOORE.

It is not often that we have such a more truly honest bit of landscape painting than in Mr. H. Moore's "Sleighing Ferns," now exhibiting at the Portland Gallery. The scene is a broken woodland in a hilly district, the ground covered with fern, which is being cleared. The handling of the foliage is very truthful and telling, both as regards structure and colour, the richer green being judiciously tempered with warmer tints. The sky, which is somewhat hard and cold in character—as it usually is—can be seen in summer in this fickle climate—is vigorously and solidly painted. The great skill is shown in graduating the point of the sleighing fern, from green to yellow, and in varying the degree of light and shade. The group of labourers with horses in the foreground is introduced with great judgment, and is carefully drawn and painted, as is the whole picture. The horses must be commended for the admirable regard for form and bone, the perfect modelling, and surface treatment displayed in them.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES.—In the new numbers of the North American Review and American Journal of Science we have the opinions of two American men on the Darwinian theory. In the former Mr. Wallace discusses in a very thoughtful manner its excellence as a work of imagination in the highest sense of the word. In the latter Professor Dana criticises Dr. Asa Gray speaks much more favourably of the work. He says "it is a masterly exhibition of the facts which bear upon the theory, and of what can be said for and against it. For reserves his judgment as to the theory."

ROYAL INSTITUTION.—The report of the annual meeting took place. The visitors' report testified to the unprecedented prosperity of the institution. The following noblemen were elected to be elected to the council:—The Duke of Northumberland, president; Wm. Pole, F.R.S., treasurer; Right Hon. Lord Rayleigh, secretary; Duke of Bedford, Earl Cowper, Earl Ducie, Lord Aldborne, Sir H. J. Murchison, Sir C. Fellows, Sir C. Hamilton Ross, Professor Odling, Professor Dewar, Dr. Frankland, Dr. Andrew Jones, J. Bigsby, and L. Powell; Messrs. W. H. Grove, Q.C., J. Pollock, J. Spottiswoode, and Professor Tyndall. Mr. Tyndall's discourses and interesting experiments on Relapsing (i.e. the freezing together of pieces of ice) were listened to with great attention by a crowded audience. He said that the vacuous theory of Professor Forbes, and the kinetic theory of Professor Clausius, were the two theories which explained the phenomena.

CHRISTIAN GOTTFRIED EHRENBERG, the eminent Prussian naturalist, who died on the 23rd ult. a foreign Associate of the French Academy of Sciences; in the room of his distinguished countryman, Professor Wöhler, the following candidates were—for Ehrenberg, 36; and for Liebig, 21; for Wöhler, 1. The new academician himself, by the aid of the microscope, to those physiological researches which have made his name a household word in Germany. He also discovered a scientific tour through Egypt and Abyssinia, and attained the rank of major in the field corps of engineers. His name will be perpetually associated with the microscopic animals named by him Infusoria, and of which, as the result of researches, he formed entire choice of mountains, rock, Silurian strata, and even coal-measures. Some of his gold cruet and has played a very important part in the industries was published in 1838.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

PROFESSOR ADAMS'S LECTURE.—Professor Adams in the second lecture "On the Atlantic Ocean." Little was known of its deep waters until the late soundings of Lieutenant Berryman, of the U.S. ship Arctic; and of Lieutenant Dayman, of the British ship Cyclops, in the years 1849-50, when sounding to the depth of 2,000 fathom, a new apparatus was invented by Lieutenant Brooke, of the U.S. Navy, and described by Mr. Fox. Shortly after Lieutenant Dayman was enabled to map out the bed of the Atlantic from Newfoundland to the Irish coast, discovering the Newfoundland plateau of shelly bottom. The lowest depth marked by Lieutenant Dayman is 2,400 fathom, but Professor Adams said that his theory was that the water fells in proportion to the depth; sometimes from 32° on the surface to 38° at low depths, and remained after the latter temperature. Professor Huxley were exhibited under a microscope, showing the remains of minute animals which had been brought up from the bottom of the sea. Mr. Massey's deep-sea sounding apparatus (kindly lent for the occasion) was exhibited and explained by Professor Adams. Some interesting relics of history, of this course, are Central Africa and Australia.

THE ROYAL ENGINEERS (Submarine Department at Woolwich) gave the Friday evening discourse, every sentence of which conveyed valuable information to the public. The subject was "Submarine Mines, with reference to the Efficiency and Welfare of Military Forces," to which the attention of the country has been specially directed of late by the operations of the Crimean War. Colonel F. J. Yorke was in the chair. We can only mention briefly the principal points touched upon by Mr. Malet. Submarine mines of a century gave were made of wrought-iron shells and hoops welded together, and of a form which was adopted from the experiments of Sir Charles Pasley, of the fifteenth century they had been superseded by bronze; and in the present century by cast-iron and wrought-iron shells. Owing to the uncertain durability of that material, engineers have made many experiments, and at Liverpool, above the Canada Dock, a magazine of 1,000 tons capacity has been constructed. We have been successful, the having presented to the Royal Engineers Establishment at Chatham, by Mr. Mallet, and others have been for more successful in concentrating the explosive force. The gun-cotton is manufactured by pressing it upon a cylinder of cast or wrought-iron, which leave about a quarter of an inch space between the cotton and the shell. Mr. Malet then explained the galvanic apparatus, the construction of which was described by Professor Abel at the Royal Institution. He first to cast masses of steel large enough for the purpose, and then to roll them into plates, which were afterwards bent by him to their adoption in Prussia. Mr. Whitworth has recently applied the principle of hooping to his guns, and has succeeded in obtaining homogeneous iron, to the manufacture both of rifle-barrels and his new compressed steel guns. Mr. Whitworth's method is to make the gun-cotton of a tube of homogeneous iron, upon which wrought-iron rings are shrunk by hydraulic pressure. Besides the use of explosive material, especially for small arms, having by becoming acid injured them, Mr. Abel has introduced a method of rendering gun-cotton absolutely safe. After careful experiment, Professor Wheatstone and Mr. Abel have succeeded in firing a charge of gun-cotton submerged in water by means of a voltaic battery at the agent for firing mines. This was shown. Volunteer submarine mines have also advantageously replaced wrought-iron shells. The construction of receptacles for submarine charges; as waterproof linings for gun-cotton cartridges, and connecting wires, was also explained. The welfare of the troops has also recently been greatly promoted. India-rubber bags are now used for the conveyance of water in the interior intrenchments, and soluble glass and other materials have been employed for the purpose of rendering the water in wells, &c., undrinkable by the enemy. Drinkable water for troops on the march were described, as well as the method of rendering unwholesome water wholesome. Also of rendering unwholesome water wholesome and palatable. In conclusion, Captain Scott, assistant-director of works, and Lieutenant Bailey, R.E., explained the library, to which numerous additions were referred to. Chlorine, and the of its separation. Soda and chlorine were referred to. Chlorine, and the chief manufactures of soda, bromine and iodine, were shown to exhibit many analogous circumstances even more energetic chemical action than chlorine. The relations of phosphorus, sulphur, hydrogen, and carbon to each other and to oxygen were then considered. The discourse concluded with a brief account of the comparative affinities of the metals for oxygen, sulphur, chlorine, and its analogies.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

In the golden days of H. B. (the present generation may require to be told that these initials, being interpreted, mean the designation of the last and the best of political caricaturists), there was a famous sketch of a Whig Chancellor of the Exchequer sitting in a desolate attitude on the Treasury bench, and it was entitled "A good man struggling with difficulties." Even such a sketch might be now made of Lord John Russell on the nights when his Reform Bill is being made a shuttlecock of from one side of the House to the other. There he sits with his arms folded and his hat drawn over his eyes, alone in more senses than one, for the underlings of the Government do not think it necessary to show their allegiance to him, or their adhesion to his measure, by putting in appearances. To be sure, by his side sits Lord Palmerston; but hour after hour passes and no word is exchanged between them, for the Premier is assiduous in cultivating that deep repose which long habit enables him to snatch with singular facility on the accustomed cushions of the House of Commons. Indeed, that faculty was exhibited in an especial degree on an occasion when he might have been supposed to have been likely to be wide awake. During a long and ingenious vindication by Mr. Denman of the claim of Tiverton to the undisturbed possession of the political rights which it has hitherto enjoyed, his noble colleague was locked faster than ever in that oblivion which he seems to be able to reconcile with the necessary vigilance of the leader of the House and the head of the Government. Lord North, when First Minister, has been known to sleep in the gallery nearly through a debate, and towards its close come down to his place, obtain a rapid résumé from his Secretary to the Treasury of the salient points of the discussion, and then make most telling and striking speeches in reply to every body. This is a precedent for a somnolent Premier, and no man is better able to do the same thing than the present possessor of the chief office under the Crown. Nevertheless, he must have been roused the other night when Mr. Black delivered a remarkable address against the main feature of the bill, which set gentlemen opposite dancing in their seats, and caused Lord John's crouching attitude to assume a more painful intensity. On that same evening there was a gathering on the Conservative benches which was explained when Sir Bulwer Lytton rose. The collapse of the debate since that time has been so complete that one's memory of that speech has grown faint, but it is unquestionable that it was a magnificent oration. Every sentence was a picture, and, as a piece of oratorical composition and construction, it was as nearly perfect as possible, while the impression which it produced was, for the time, immense. Nevertheless, taken critically, it may be likened to champagne—sparkling, foaming, creaming, rich in flavour, and stimulating for the moment, but wanting in body and evanescent in reference to effect. The draught, delicious as it was, was rather too large. In plain English, the speech was just half an hour too long. It would have been better if the classical episode had been omitted. When a gentleman begins to talk to the House of Commons about Athens every one but the members for the Universities, who feel called on by the requirements of their position to look as appreciative as they can, gets fidgety, and the appearance of listeners becomes protesting. Latin quotations are just endured; but when a speaker goes as far back as Greece for his illustrations, there is a manner about the House which indicates the existence of an idea that any such allusions ought to have been put into schedule A of the first Reform Bill. Sir Lytton, too, made a mistake when he kept harping on the enormities of Mr. Bright. So ludicrous has become the constant repetition of references to the hon member for Birmingham that it is time that a standing order should be passed limiting the number of times in which his name should be introduced into speeches. Nevertheless, something of this everlasting onslaught is owing to the remarkable sensitiveness which Mr. Bright displays at attacks made upon him. Why, even when such a curds-and-whey politician and orator as Mr. Baillie Cochrane endeavoured to add his contribution to the pile of stones which are being constantly thrown at the member for Birmingham, he was weak enough to give to such an assailant the advantage to be derived from his getting angry, and at last to cap the triumph of his puny antagonist by rising and leaving the House.

Many signs indicate that the Opposition believes itself capable of carrying out a policy of obstruction; but it was hardly to be supposed that resort would be had to such physical means of stopping the progress of the Reform Bill as blocking up the door of the House in order to prevent members entering to save the ridicule of a "count out." Even such a step was taken, however, and a compact body of robust Conservatives filled up every avenue into the body of the House, when an attempt was made to make the debate on the bill for the amendment of the representation of the people a lapsed order. Through this phalanx, with difficulty, broke a forty-first member, we verily believe the individual being Lord John Russell himself, who, scared and agitated, came in person to the rescue. It was this circumstance which probably induced the noble Lord to rise and deliver his speech in the debate at a moment when no such climax had been reached as demanded the intervention of a Cabinet Minister of the first rank, for he perhaps felt that things were taking such a course that the discussion might come to an untimely end without his contribution. In truth, though earnest and assured enough in manner, there was visible effort in Lord John's speech, and he seemed as if he was only conscientiously discharging a duty, which was akin to delivery from a burden. Whispers were about early one evening that Mr. Gladstone was to make a sacrificial appearance in favour of the Reform Bill, but an opportune east wind intervened, and bronchital influences prevailed over the sympathy of a colleague. Well, Chatham found gout not so inconvenient from a public-life point of view. It is really hard that one cannot recur to one's memory of a speech without the everlasting intervention of the argumentum ad hominem directed against Mr. Bright. Here we have Mr. Walter speaking sentences which seem word for word reproductions from leaders in the Times, and he, too, bitterly, very bitterly—with a bitterness that appeared almost personal—anathematises the member for Birmingham for, of all things in the world, questioning the motives of the gentlemen who compose the Conservative party! Mr. Walter sits always in close vicinage to Mr. Bright; he is almost always in the same lobby with him on divisions. Why so much virtuous indignation against him? Mr. Walter declared that he is so marked a specimen of that, to us, mythical individual, an independent member, that his political existence depends on himself alone. Does he in this respect ignore Printing House-square, and does he believe solely in his squirearchcial qualifications in Berkshire. If so, why talk, as we have said, Times leaders, and take his illustrations from the machinery of the leading journal. All we can say is that, looking at this gentleman's speech as a whole, we can fancy how tempting it must have been to one of his own trenchant staff. What a slashing article might have been founded upon it.

One very significant occurrence of the past week claims our attension. There has evidently been a gathering together, in doors and out, of the opponents of the abolition of church rates. That bill has been fought with great pertinacity this year in Parliament; and on the third reading, which was carried by so narrow a majority, the demonstration was one of the most prononcé that perhaps has been witnessed for years in the House. The agitation and excitement on the Opposition side was immense. It was with difficulty that the tellers were enabled to perform their function of declaring the numbers, so great was the talking and bustle; and before they were able to speak out the tale there were enthusiastic exclamations of "only nine majority;" while the cheering afterwards was not only long-enduring and tremendous, but positively fierce; and even when it had exceeded the limits of nine times nine and one cheer more, a prolonged yell from the midst of the crowd at the bar rung through the silence that had at last been obtained. This demonstration, of course, means something, and it is not very difficult to divine what it means.

Another year, and yet Lord Lyndhurst lives for his country. Simultaneously that noble Peer and Sir C. Napier in the two Houses were discoursing on the affairs of the Navy—

Superfluous lag the veterans, &c.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

PRINCE CONSTANTINE CZARTORYSKI.

The venerable Prince Constantine Adam Alexander Czartoryski, whose decease has just occurred, was the only brother of the present head of the Zukow and senior branch of the family, Prince Adam Czartoryski, Duke of Klewan, now living in Paris. Prince Constantine Adam Alexander Czartoryski was born the 28th of October, 1773, and married, first, the 16th of September, 1808, Angelica, daughter of Michael, late Prince of Radzevill; and secondly, the 20th of March 1810, Maria, Countess Dzierzonowska, who is deceased, and had one son by his first wife, and three sons by his second wife. Prince Constantine Czartoryski lived at Vienna, in strict and dignified retirement, not at all engaging himself in politics, but taking great interest in, and patronising all that related to, art. Two of his sons are the editors of a monthly publication, which is devoted to the formation and encouragement of artistic taste. Prince Constantine had a box at the Burg Theatre, near that of the Emperor, and until the last few weeks was a constant attendant at the performances. His style at home was that of a grand Seigneur. He was much loved and respected, and to him his countrymen had ready recourse when in difficulty or distress. He was, in fact, a true and worthy scion of the once regal, and, in every sense, always princely, house of Czartoryski.

THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF MANSFIELD.

The Right Hon. Frederica, Dowager Countess of Mansfield, was the daughter of the Most Rev. Dr. William Markham, Archbishop of York, and was married on the 16th of September, 1797, to William, third Earl of Mansfield, the grand nephew of the first Earl of Mansfield, the eminent William Murray, Lord Chief Justice of England. By this marriage (her husband the Earl died on the 18th of February, 1840) her Ladyship had issue three sons and six daughters, of whom two sons and four daughters survive her. Her eldest daughter, Lady Frederica Louisa, wife of the late Colonel the Hon. James Hamilton Stanhope, died in 1823. The Countess's youngest daughter, Lady Emily, is the wife of Colonel Hugh Francis George Seymour. The Countess's eldest son, William David, is the fourth and present Earl of Mansfield. Her Ladyship, who was much respected, died on the 29th ult., at her town residence, Langham House, Portland-place, in her eighty-sixth year.

THE DOWAGER LADY LANGFORD.

The Right Hon. Frances Rowley, Dowager Baroness Langford, who died on the 30th ult., at her town house, 47, Berkeley-square, in her eighty-sixth year, was the only daughter of the Hon. Clotworthy Rowley, by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of William Crosbie, Esq., and was granddaughter and heiress of Elizabeth, in her own right Viscountess Langford, wife of the Right Hon. Hercules Langford Rowley. She was also first cousin to the great Duke of Wellington and to the Earl of Longford. Her Ladyship was married, in 1794, to her first cousin, the son of Thomas, first Earl of Bective, the Hon. Clotworthy Taylour, who assumed the name and arms of Rowley, and was created Baron Langford on the 30th of July, 1800, and died on the 13th of September, 1825. Their issue were two daughters, the Hon. Mrs. Ferguson, of Pitfour, and the Hon. Mdme. de Satgé, and two sons, of whom the younger is surviving—viz., Lieut.-Col. the Hon. Richard Thomas Rowley. Their other and elder son was Hercules Langford, second Baron Langford, whose grandson is Hercules Edward, fourth and present Lord Langford, who is in his fourteenth year, and is at Eton.

THE HON. CHARLES KENNEY.

The Hon Charles Kenney, President of the Island of Monserrat, and formerly Captain in her Majesty's 52nd Light Infantry, son of the late Charles Kenney, Esq., of St. Katrines, Liberton, and Castle-street, Edinburgh, died on the 18th of March last, in the Island of Nevis, West Indies, aged seventy. This gallant Peninsular and Waterloo officer joined the 52nd Regiment as Ensign, at Busaco, in 1810, and from thence served throughout the Peninsular Campaign, distinguishing himself at the following actions and battles—viz., Pombal, Redinba, Casa Nova, Foz d'Aronce, Sabugal, Fuentes d'Onore, Ciudad Rodrigo (siege and storming), San Millan, Vittoria, Vera heights, Pyrenees, Nivelle (and was wounded), Nive, Orthes, Tarbes (was wounded), and Tolouse, and was afterwards present at Waterloo, and was there again wounded. He received for his conduct the war medal with seven clasps and the Waterloo medal. He had been for some years senior member of her Majesty's Council and Stipendiary Magistrate of the Island of Nevis, and was appointed to the Presidency of Monserrat shortly before his death. He married Jessy, relict of the late Henry Harding, Esq., of Nevis, and direct descendant, on her maternal side, of the Rev. Edward Moore, Vicar of Over, in the county of Chester, who died in 1757, and was descended from Chancellor Sir Thomas More, whose arms he bore. A century ago the Moores intermarried with the ancient family of Dawson, of Kingston, a member of which, Francis Dawson, was the well-known sportsman and comrade of George IV. when Prince of Wales.

The Kenneys—the paternal family of the Hon. Charles Kenney, just deceased—are sprung from an ancient Irish source. The Hon. Charles Kenney's father, Charles Kenney, Esq., who settled in Scotland in the last century, was possessed of large estates in the West Indies. He married Judith Aletta Benners, of very ancient Dutch lineage, and related to many distinguished Dutch and Danish families. She, too, inherited West India property.

LIEUT.-COLONEL CAMERON.

Lieut.-Colonel Nathaniel Cameron, who died at St. Leonards-on-Sea on the 20th ult., aged seventy-three, was the second son of Lieut.-General Sir Alan Cameron, K.C.B., who raised, equipped, and commanded that very distinguished Highland regiment known as her Majesty's 79th Cameron Highlanders. Nathaniel Cameron's brother, Philipps-Cameron, the eldest son of the late General, was killed in action at the head of his regiment at Fuentes d'Onore, in Portugal, leaving his brother Nathaniel, who commanded the 2nd battalion, surviving. Nathaniel was present with his battalion at the siege of Copenhagen, and continued in the service until the peace of 1815, about which time he retired into private life. He was nephew to the Dowager Lady Lichfield and to the Baroness de Rutzen, and consequently was first cousin to the present Lord Lichfield and to Lady Elcho. His first wife was Miss Cuny, an heiress of ancient family residing at Haverfordwest, in Pembrokeshire, daughter of the Rev. John Cuny, and granddaughter of Sir Richard Philipps, of Picton Castle, and niece of Joseph Pryce, Esq., of Court of Came and Gellyhyr. The gallant Colonel subsequently settled near his wife's estates, adjoining Swansea, in the county of Glamorgan. On the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832 he was three times successively elected Mayor of Swansea, and was solicited to represent in Parliament that borough, but he declined. He married, secondly, rather late in life, Miss Shewell, of Lewes, in Sussex, sister of Colonel Shewell, so well known at Balaclava. He left no issue by his second marriage; but by his first marriage Colonel Cameron left two sons and eight daughters, one of whom intermarried with the eldest son of Mr. Bruce Pryce, near Cardiff, and another with Edward M. Elderton, Esq., of the Temple, London.

RALPH PRICE, ESQ.

Ralph Price, Esq., who died at his residence at Sydenham, Kent, on the 3rd ult., in the eighty-first year of his age, was the second surviving son of Sir Charles Price, the first Baronet, of Spring Grove, in the county of Surrey, for many years M.P. for the city of London. He was born on the 8th of February, 1780, and at an early age entered upon mercantile pursuits under the auspices of his father, who, being then much engaged with public duties, intrusted the chief conduct of his business to his son, who continued to take an active part in mercantile affairs until his death. He was much respected and esteemed both in public and in private life. Mr. Price was for many years vice-president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and for upwards of thirteen years he filled the important office of treasurer of the Royal Hospitals of Bridewell and Bethlem, from which he retired in 1847. There are but few of the charities of London of which he was not a liberal supporter. Mr. Price married, the 3rd September, 1805, Charlotte Savery, second daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Carterett Hardy, Colonel Commandant of the Royal York Fusiliers, and by her, who died the 1st April, 1850, he has left two sons and three daughters:—viz., Ralph Charles, who married, the 1st Oct., 1835, his cousin, Eliza Albinia, daughter of the late Sir Charles Price, Bart., and has a numerous family; Francis Lysons, who married, 28th Dec., 1854, Louisa Georgina, second daughter of the late Charles Burlton, Esq., of her Majesty's 41st Regiment, and has one daughter. The daughters whom Mr. Ralph Price has left are Charlotte Mary, who is unmarried; Sarah Anne, the wife of Simon Adams Beck, Esq., of Cheam, Surrey; and Laura Frances, the wife of Robert Still, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn, and of Sutton-hill, in the county of Surrey.

Memoir of Jean Becker.—(To the Editor.)—I have read with pleasure the biographical sketch given of me in your valued Paper; but one point in my musical education was omitted, to which I now beg to draw your attention. Although I certainly began the study of music without a master, yet, before I went to Paris, I had a most efficient and clever master in Herr Kettenus (now residing in London, was leader under Jullien, and now engaged at her Majesty's Theatre), and the deep gratitude which I owe him induces me to trouble you with this letter, with the earnest hope that you will insert it in your next Paper.—Jean Becker, 17, South Molton-street. April 30, 1860.

It is reported that the Government have signified their willingness to negotiate for the Great Eastern to take out the telegraph cable about to be laid between Singapore and Rangoon, an opportunity which it is presumed the directors will be glad to seize on any reasonable terms.

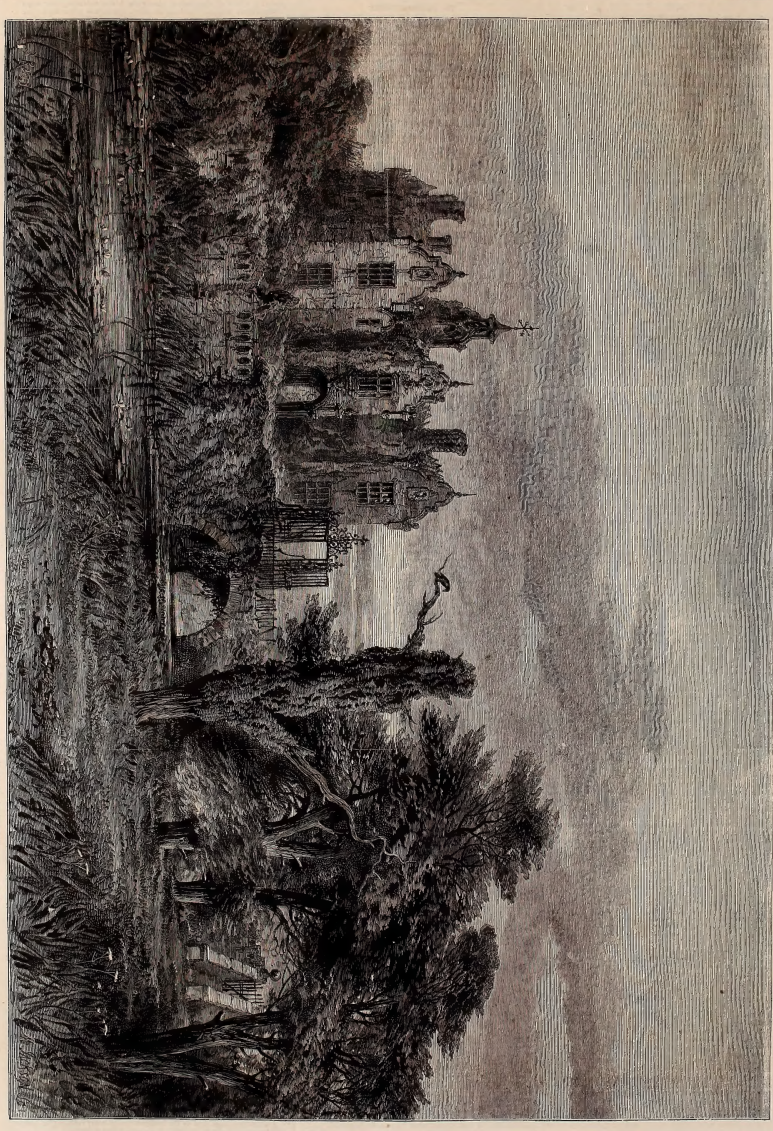
"ILL MAY DAY." BY JOHN LEIGHTON.

Mr. John Leighton has just completed a remarkable picture, illustrative of an incident in the domestic history of England, which has given an ill name to the first day of "the merry month of May"; we may add that the subject is one which, we believe, has not before been treated by the painter, and the work, therefore, has the combined recommendation of high intrinsic merit, striking historical interest, and complete novelty. The incident to which it relates is one which strongly marks the spirit of the times in the early part of the sixteenth century, and has been so graphically described by Miss Strickland, in her "Lives of the Queens of England," that we cannot do better than quote the passage:—

On the 1st of May, 1517, the national jealousy of the Londoners regarding foreigners broke out into that formidable insurrection of the apprentices in London, which is called in our domestic history "Ill May Day." There is no evidence that the Queen unduly patronised foreigners, yet the popular fury was directed against her countrymen. Several Spanish merchants' houses were sacked and burnt, and the inhabitants were murdered. The Duke of Norfolk, who had been incensed by the recent murder of a priest of his household by the citizens, was sent to quell the uproar; and then proceeded to dispense martial-law in the turbulent metropolis. This he did with such vengeance that dozens of the unfortunate boys who had raised the riot were soon seen hanging over their master's signposts. As several hundred apprentices were captives to the vengeful Duke, their mothers supposed all were to be immolated in the same manner. Calling together all their female relatives, they went to the palace, and, with streaming eyes, raised such a piteous wail for mercy that the Queen heard the cry of maternal agony in the retirement of her chamber. She summoned her sister Queens, Margaret of Scotland and Mary of France, to aid her. They flew with dishevelled hair to the King, and, kneeling before him, begged for pity on the misguided boys. Every one was struck with the benevolence of Queen Catherine, because the rioters had directed their fury against her nation. This incident is commemorated to her honour in a ballad-poem of her times, which preserves many curious traits of that era. "It is most likely by Churchyard, who was the contemporary of Catherine, and an habitué of her Court."

In the treatment of his subject Mr. Leighton has managed to give it a character bespeaking the period to which it refers. In the architecture and furniture of the King's Palace at Westminster, in the glimpse of the outer world seen on the left, and in the cloistered recess on the right, we clearly read the solid grandeur of the Tudor period. The bluff King is represented of the very type which has become traditional of him; and the wily Cardinal, in his robe of rich silk, is a perfect historical study. The Spanish loveliness of Catherine of Arragon contrasts well with the blonde beauty of the two sisters of the King, Margaret of Scotland, and Mary of France, in which the artist adheres correctly to authorities. But all these, though in themselves essential points, are of secondary consideration when compared with the ingenious construction of the remainder of the composition, and the powerful and appropriate action of the figures which tell the story. The three Queens, on their knees in various attitudes of supplication, mingle their intreaties with the more distant wailings of wives, mothers, and sisters of the unfortunate apprentices, who are seen in the courtyard, with ropes round their necks, awaiting their doom. This last-named group, discovered through a partially-opened curtain, is a picture in itself, and fully divides the interest with the more impassioned action in the foreground.

Mr. Leighton has completed the historical character of his picture by surrounding it with an appropriate border of panel work, in which are carved or attached representations of the Royal arms, as well as those of the City and of the principal London companies.



Births, Deaths, and Marriages in 1859.—The total number of persons married in England in the year 1859 was 335,800; the births in the year were 689,558; and the deaths, 441,249, being a majority of births over deaths of 248,309. Of the births, 352,616 were males, and 336 942 females; of the deaths, 223,789 were males, and 217,450 females. The number of persons married in London within the year was 54,540; the births, 92,971; and the deaths, 61,950, being a majority of births over deaths of 31,021. The population of London in 1851 was 2,362,236.

The National Shooting-match.—The Grand English Shooting-meeting, arranged under the auspices of the National Rifle Association, will commence, at Wimbledon Common, on the 2nd of July. The number of prizes will be large, and the competitors will be divided into two classes, "Volunteers," and "all comers of all nations." In the volunteer department there will be six ranges, varying from 300 to 1000 yards—the shooting at the lowest range to be "off" the shoulder, and at the remaining five ranges, from the knee. The Queen's prize of £250, together with the gold medal of the association, will be offered for competition at ranges of 800, 900, and 1000 yards, and the contest for the prize will be confined to those who have shown most skill at the shorter distances. For "all comers of all nations," the ranges will vary from 200 to 1000 yards, and the Prince Consort offers a prize of £100 to the best shot at 800, 900, and 1000 yards. The minor volunteer prizes will be contended for with the long Enfield; but before specifying the description of the rifle with which the gold medal and her Majesty's £250 shall be competed for, the Association has determined that a trial of different small arms shall take place, in order that the most effective weapon may be selected.

Training-ships.—Now that the state of our naval reserves has attracted considerable attention some account of the training ships, in which the naval volunteers are drilled, will not be without its interest. In the Times of Tuesday we find such an account:—"Those who go on board expecting to see the neat discipline and uniformity of dress which prevail on board a regular man-of-war will be disappointed. Gold lace and quarter-deck routine is wisely kept as much in the background as possible. Thus the men, being all merchant seamen, come in what dress they like, and as long as they go through their twenty-eight days' drill in the course of the year—doing duty at whatever periods are most convenient to themselves—they earn their £10, and can go about their business till the twelvemonth has expired, when they take twenty eight days more in the same manner. Those on board the Brilliant, a 26-gun frigate, now lying in the West India Docks, are all in the West India trade, and, as a matter of course, prefer to take their twenty-eight days' drill at once. Those in the coasting and home trades take four drills of seven days each, whenever they choose, in the intervals between their regular voyages. On board the Brilliant, as in all the other vessels, the men come on board at 9.30 in the morning, when they are mustered and told off to their guns in time to commence at ten o'clock. From this till twelve they work at the guns, when they are allowed two hours for dinner, falling in again at two and drilling till 4.30, when they are dismissed and go home, having, of course, the rest of the day to themselves. These hours are easy enough, yet, short as they are, from the men liking the exercise (especially the broad sword), they contrive to make astonishing proficiency when the time of their drill is taken into consideration. Yesterday on board the Brilliant, from the time the word was given to fall in till they had fired three rounds from each gun at 400, 600, and 800 yards' elevation, was only four minutes—a most creditable result when it is recollected that some of the men had only been a week at quarters and none had fully completed their twenty-eight days."

Masked Ball at the Hotel d'Albe.—Galignani contains a lively account, which we abridge, of a bal costumé given by the Emperor of the French at the Hôtel d'Albe on Tuesday se'nnight. The Emperor made his entry shortly after eleven, in a black domino, which he only removed during the evening to substitute for a blue one. The Empress, who arrived soon after, was attended through the rooms by Prince de Metternich. Her Majesty also wore a domino, which, to the general surprise, she never took off, report having affirmed that she was to appear as Diana, the Huntress. Her Majesty only remained a short time. The costume of the Princess Mathilde was of a most unusual description, as the texture of her skin was completely darkened, to represent a copper-coloured Indian, and to suit a curiously picturesque attire, lightly fastened together. The Countess Walewska represented Water, being dressed as Undine. She wore a coronet of diamonds, surmounted by a conch shell of diamonds and opals. Behind floated on her shoulders marine shrubs. Air was personified by the Countess de Morny, who wore a head-dress of diamonds with wings at the sides, her hair being powdered with silver, whilst behind were to be seen light pinions. The Princess Swiskowska represented Earth. Her head-dress was composed of a crenelated tower in gold, ornamented on one side with a cornucopiæ, from which fell flowers and fruits. Fire was represented by Princess Czartoriska, daughter of Queen Christina. She wore a diadem of flames of gold, her hair being powdered with gold, and flames of the same metal were intermingled with her hair. At two o'clock the curtain, which hung between the pillars of the garden corridor, was raised and presented a sight the magnificence of which could scarcely have been imagined, unless in beholding some picture by Paul Veronese. This was the banquet hall, which to that hour had not been opened. The corridor led on to galleries, which extended down both sides of the hall. At the farther end scenery had been arranged so as to vanish into distance; a fountain sent up its waters in the foreground, and on them an electric light was so adjusted as to give the watery spray as it rose and fell the appearance of frosted silver. The scene was most beautiful, and called vividly to mind those abodes only read of in the "Arabian Nights." The Emperor sat down at one of the tables, but did not remove his mask even while taking refreshment. Among the costumes noticed for their historical correctness and splendour were those worn by three English officers—Captain Lumley, in the character of the Earl of Essex; Colonel Burnaby, as Gustavus Adolphus; and Captain Maxse, as Francis I.

OUT-DOOR AMUSEMENTS.

MAY.

According to an ancient authority, May is represented with a sweet and amiable countenance, clad in a robe of white and green, embroidered with daffodils, hawthorns, and bluebottles; upon his head a garland of white, damask, and red roses; in one hand a lute; upon the forefinger of the other a nightingale, with the sign Gemini. In the olden time all ranks of people went out a maying early on the 1st of this month. In the north of England the inhabitants have always been famed for their strict adherence to ancient customs. On this day, generally called May Day, the juvenile part of both sexes were wont to rise a little after midnight, and walk to some neighbouring wood, accompanied with music and the blowing of horns, where they broke down branches from the trees, and adorned them with nosegays and crowns of flowers. When this was done they returned with their booty homewards about the rising of the sun, and made their doors and windows to triumph in the flowery spoil. The after part of the day was chiefly spent in dancing round a tall pole, which was called a maypole, placed in a convenient part of the village or hamlet, where it stood consecrated, as it were, to the goddess of flowers, without the slightest violation offered to it, during the whole circle of the year. It is thus described by the poet:—

> Your maypole deck with flowery coronal;
> Sprinkle the flowery coronal with wine;
> And in the nimble-footed galliard all,
> Shepherds and shepherdesses, lively join.
> Hither, from village sweet and hamlet fair,
> From bordering cot, and distant glen, repair.
> Let youth indulge its sports, to eld bequeath its care.

An all-wise and beneficent Providence has decreed that no season of the life of man, doomed to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, should be without some sort of recreation or enjoyment to unbend the mind, soften the rigour of trials, or, by rest, renew the strength for future toils. No sooner are the labours of agriculture suspended, or confined to the barn and farmyard, than the fields, cleared of their late exuberant crops, and left to recover their fertility through the nitrous particles of frost and snow, are thronged by birds and animals of the chase of all kinds, ready to furnish pleasure to the sportsman of every degree, from the ancestral halls of England to the humble homestead. Let us enter the latter, where the bulky woodstacks supply the farmer's chimney with a lively blaze, and the good man, seated with his family and dependents around the cheerful hearth, tells and hears alternately the village tale, while the rustic song and harmless joke go round, enlivened by the brown jugs of mirth-inspiring October ale. Or, if he is in the prime of life and fond of the chase,

> he follows to the field
> Some sporting lord.

Then is the grand music of the horns and the hounds, the exhilarating cry of the huntsman, the oft-repeated peals of the slaughtering gun delightful to the ear of the tiller of the soil, who dreads not the havoc and destruction of his standing crops, the reward of his expense and toil, by the too ardent sportsman. Were but this destructive eagerness for pleasure restrained within due bounds, and the land suffered to be cleared before the lovers of field sports commenced their career, no farmer would grumble; on the contrary, it is evident that he must be a gainer by them.

The oats, beans, hay, straw, bran, pollard, &c., consumed or used by the horses and dogs, the number of extra servants kept by the landlords or proprietors of land, who must all be fed from the produce of the farm, and the strangers who are constantly drawn from all parts to partake of those sports and expend their money, must be more than a sufficient remuneration for a few gaps in his hedges or a few trifling repairs to his fences. Were the sportsmen, therefore, more considerate in this respect, and, more particularly, were the game laws less severe on the farmers, who support the game they dare not pursue, or, were gentlemen less strict in forcing their severity, and suffered the farmers to join in moderation in those exhilarating pursuits, we should hear no more grumbling at the destructive ravages of hunters, and the partial and unjust rigour of the game laws. It would be easy, too, to prove, that if the farmers themselves were interested in the preservation of game, it would be in greater plenty, and poachers would be no more, as every farmer would be a gamekeeper. Such lenity, therefore, would redound to the interest of the sportsman, as well as to the satisfaction of the farmer, and its beneficial results would be soon apparent. The brood of partridges would no longer be destroyed in the nests; the young leverets would not be killed ere their tender limbs gave them a chance of flight for their lives. There would be no longer any night hunting, stalking, driving, nets, gins, wires, and other destructive schemes for killing game by coveys or dozens; but all would be fair sporting. The farmer would consider the season of rest from his agricultural labours as the period of enjoying the pleasures of the field, and he would be as anxious for a plentiful supply of game as any landed proprietor. We can speak from a somewhat long experience that in those parts of the country where the owners showed a feeling of liberality towards their tenants, and alone enforced the rigour of the law against regular poachers and vagabonds, mercifully forgiving those who were unwillingly led into temptation, and who would be ruined by incarceration in prison, there was always to be found the greatest plenty of game of every kind. "Time has circled on"—winter has given way to spring—and yet there is no diminution of out-door amusements; for, although the hunter is summered in the stable, or turned out to grass—the kenneled greyhound no longer hears the three "soho's" before the timid hare is put from her lair, and the pointer, setter, and retriever are enjoying a few months' repose after their labours in the field and forest, the sportsman has to prepare for a summer campaign against the finny tribe; to handle his bat and show how scores were won; to prepare his bow and arrow; to fit out his yacht; to watch the progress of the high-mettled racers at the Newmarket Spring and Epsom meetings; to get his gun ready for a day's pigeon-shooting at Hornsey Wood or other suburban localities; for angling, flyfishing, cricketing, archery, yachting, racing, and pigeon-shooting can be carried on to perfection during the merry month of May. If the air is cold and raw, the wind high, and the water rough, or if much rain prevails, it is a perfect waste of time to attempt to angle in the Thames, and we should advise the follower of "old Izaak" to devote those hours to preparing his implements of destruction. The pliant rod ought to be carefully examined, the joints and rings looked to, the landing-net repaired, the luring fly formed, and the book replenished with the well barbed hook, fine, round, strong catgut, whipcord, scissors, lines, nippers, and wax. The fisherman will then be ready to avail himself of the first fine day, when a serene sky, a light air, and smooth water will give him every prospect of success. To those who are expert at flyfishing for trout we strongly recommend a visit to the numerous rivers and streams that run throughout the United Kingdom. With a mayfly, on a dark, breezy day, free from a cold, cutting wind, from six to twelve in the morning, and from three till dusk in the afternoon, the lover of the "gentle crafte" may calculate upon an excellent day's sport. There is a great variety in the size and colour of trout, as every stream and lake differs in the quality of this fish. In the clear, pure waters in rocky and mountainous countries trout grow very large, and sometimes weigh from eight and twenty to thirty pounds; large, rapid rivers contain them from ten to fifteen pounds weight, although the generality of them in our streams do not exceed five pounds. In fast-flowing brooks, which, upon the fall of heavy showers, swell to a great height, but which in fair weather have but little stream, plenty of small "swift trout" are to be found amidst the eddies, deep holes, and amongst the roots of trees. The first care of the flyfisher ought to be to keep as much out of the sight of the fish as possible, throwing the line lightly on the water, so as not to make the slightest splash; the fly should fall as light as thistledown would settle upon it; and the best device for deceiving the trout is to keep the point of the rod in a tremulous motion, thus giving apparent life to the glowing yet treacherous insect. In natural-fly fishing it will only be necessary to select those which present themselves by the waterside in the greatest numbers.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Secretary.—According to the opinion of the best players the Evans's attack is invincible, and Mr. Anderson and Mr. Lange are now engaged, it is reported, on a treatise to prove that it cannot be successfully opposed.

Arthur.—What the "Chessplayer's Handbook" says, and says rightly, is—"The two Knights, with the assistance of the King, cannot force checkmate; unless, indeed, the adversary has a Pawn, which may, sometimes, be made the means of effecting it with only a single Knight"

V. de L., Weimar.—We have received and perused with much pleasure your "Schach-Erinnerungen Nebst den Spielen des Greco und Lucena," and shall take an early opportunity of directing attention to its interesting contents.

Pellegrino.—No; but he would do better—that is, give mate on the fourth move.

T. J. H.—Next week. The number required is not at hand.

N. F., Cardiff Chess Club.—We are glad to hear some stir is being made by the chess-players of Wales; hitherto they have been strangely apathetic. Send a few more specimens of Cardiff play. The variation of the Muzio Gambit received, you are probably aware, is no novelty: it was published by Koch; was carefully analyzed by Ghulam Kassim, and has been adopted in England for years. Besides, in your game, Black does not seize the advantages afforded him, very alertly. At move 17, by playing B to K R 6th, he must have won the adverse Queen; at move 22, instead of Kt to K 2nd, he should have played Kt to Q B 6th; and at move 23, in place of P to K B 4th, he must have won "incontinently" by Q to K R 4th.

Argus.—The new series of "La Regence," edited by Mr. Journoud, may be obtained from Messrs. Barthes and Lowell, Foreign booksellers, Marlborough street, Oxford-street.

F. A. Miles.—It shall have attention.

C. Schnitzler.—The copy was destroyed.

G. N.—Possibly, but is it worth the trouble?

Morden Hall.—It is quite correct.

CHESS IN PARIS.

In our last the arrival of M. Andersson, the famous German player, in Paris was announced, and through the kindness of a correspondent we hope to be enabled to present week by week some of the many interesting games which he has played or may play with the leading masters now in the French metropolis. Up to this time he has contested five games only with M. de Rivière, of which each won two, and the last, given below, was a drawn battle.

Game between Mr. Anderssen and M. de Riviere.

(Allgaier's Gambit.)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to K Kt 5th
5. Kt to K 5th	Kt to K B 3rd
6. Kt takes Kt P	Kt takes K P
7. P to Q 4th

(P to Q 3rd, leading Black to play Kt to K Kt 6th, gives White a brilliant but not an enduring attack. When the Pawn is played to Q 4th, Black cannot safely move the Kt to his 6th.)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
7.	P to K R 4th
8. Kt to K B 2nd	P to Q 4th
9. Q to K 2nd	Q to K 2nd
10. Q B takes P	Kt to Q B 3rd
11. Kt takes K Kt	P takes Kt
12. Q to Q Kt 5th	B to K Kt 2nd
13. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q R 3rd
14. Q to Q R 4th	Q B to K 3rd
15. Castles	R to Q sq
16. Kt takes K P	R takes Q P
17. R takes R	B takes R
18. B to Q 3rd	Q to Q Kt 5th

(Very well played)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
19. Q takes Q	Kt takes Q
20. P to Q R 3rd	Kt takes B (ch)
21. P takes Kt	K to Q 2nd
22. K to Q B 2nd	P to Q B 4th

(Black has now the better game.)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
23. R to K sq	R to Q B sq

(Threatening the advance of his Q B Pawn)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
24 B to K 3rd	B to K Kt 2nd
25. R to K B sq

(He dared not take the offered Pawn.)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
25.	B to Q 5th
26. Kt to K B 6th (ch)	K to K 2nd
27. B to K Kt 5th	P to Q B 5th
28. Kt takes P (dis. ch)	K to Q 3rd
29. R to K B 4th

(White has to contend with many difficulties at this point. All things considered, the move in the text was probably the best at his command, though this was far from satisfactory)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
29.	P takes P (ch)
30. K takes P	B takes Q Kt P
31. R to Q Kt 4th	B to K B 4th (ch)
32. K to K 3rd	B to Q B 8th (ch)
33. K to K B 3rd	R to Q B 6th (ch)
34. K to K B 2nd	B takes B
35. P takes B	P to Q Kt 4th
36. P to Q R 4th	R to Q B 5th
37. R takes R	P takes R
38. K to K 3rd	P to Q B 6th

(Decidedly inferior to playing his King to Q B 4th)

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
39. Kt to K Kt 3rd	B to K Kt 3rd
40. K to Q 4th	P to Q B 7th
41. Kt to K 2nd	B to K B 4th
42. K to Q B 3rd	B to K Kt 5th
43. Kt to Q B sq	B to Q 8th
44. K to Q 4th	P to Q R 4th
45. P to K Kt 3rd	B to K Kt 5th
46. K to Q B 3rd	B to Q 2nd
47. K takes P	B takes P (ch)
48. K to Q B 3rd	K to K 4th
49. Kt to Q 3rd (ch)	K to K B 4th
50. Kt to Q B 5th

And the game was ultimately drawn.

In addition to the games played with M. de Rivière, the German master has contested eleven against the redoubtable M. Kolisch, of which each won five, and the last was drawn; five games against M. Laroche, winning three and losing two; and five against M. Journoud, of which M. Anderssen scored three, lost one, and drew the fifth.

THE STANLEY-SCHULTEN BISHOP'S GAMBIT.

Sir,—I find "A Correspondent" has been directing his attention to the "Stanley-Schulten" variation of the King's Bishop's Gambit while, curiously enough, I was also considering the same opening, and had noticed several important variations, one of which is almost identical with that discovered by your correspondent. My examination, however, was directed principally to find an answer to Black's move of—11. K Kt to K 2nd, given in the "Handbook," p. 321, as the best defence for him. My variation is as follows:—

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. B to Q B 4th	Q to K R 5th (ch)
4. K to B sq	P to K Kt 4th
5. Kt to Q B 3rd	B to K Kt 2nd
6. P to Q 4th	P to Q 3rd
7. P to K 5th	P takes P
8. Kt to Q 5th	K to Q sq
9. P takes P	B to Q 2nd
10. Kt to K B 3rd	Q to R 4th
11. B to Q 2nd	K Kt to K 2nd, or (a)
12. Kt takes Kt	K takes Kt
13. B to Q Kt 4th (ch)	K to K sq

(If Black play K to Q sq, the answer may be 14. Q to Q 5th, leading to many interesting variations.)

WHITE.	BLACK.
14. P to K 6th	P takes P
15. B takes K P	B takes B
16. Q to K 2nd	Q to K Kt 5 (best)
17. P to K R 3rd	Q to K B 4th

MR. RAREY IN THE EAST.

After a tour of observation among the Arabs, extending over more than three months, the king of horse tamers has returned to our shores for his last "session." Several very advantageous offers were made to him to lecture in the French provinces, but he had to decline them all, and after four exhibitions in Paris he pushed on to Rome and Naples, and so, by Sicily and Malta, to Alexandria. Beyond the Roman habit of not shoeing the hind feet of their horses, his note-book up to that point had received very few entries, but he found himself among more congenial scenes as he sailed up the Nile towards Cairo, in the second week of February. It was just the season for turning out the Arab horses to grass, and there they stood up to their knees in it (with an ever-shifting background of camels, donkeys, and buffaloes, on whose back three or four dusky urchins might be seen riding home at nightfall), mile after mile, in bay, chestnut, and flea-bitten grey platoons, about five yards apart, and tethered to stakes by one fore and both hind legs, so as just to command their allotted range of herbage. At Cairo his stay was very limited, although he received a pressing invitation from the Viceroy of Egypt to visit him at his country seat, higher up the river; but to gaze on the high-caste "children of the star" was his sole mission, and he had no time to linger. He accordingly went on at once with his party across the Great Desert to the shores of the Red Sea, and, taking leave of them there, merely stepped aside to see the pyramids as he retraced his steps to Alexandria.

Hence he sailed to a port near Jaffa, and reached "the Eternal City," and it was on a picturesque, grassy knoll, hard by a grove of olives, that he gave the Pacha a specimen of his art. His Highness had ordered out for his inspection four of his best mares of the purest Nedgedee caste, and after he had ridden one, a grey (whose antics would have quite qualified her for a danseuse among the sawdust on "the Surrey side"), he took a brown horse from the hands of the attendant eunuch, and with the aid of the "two little straps" made him follow him everywhere about the pasture. The grey mare, whose ragged hips and long neck did not improve her, was a little over fifteen hands, and so highly valued by her master that he had refused a thousand pounds for her.

Then followed an excursion to the Dead Sea, which was somewhat spoilt by a party of Bedouins, who descended on the tent and cooking utensils, and showed their disgust at the absence of nobler plunder by making the cook stand and deliver his watch, and maltreating the solitary soldier for turning saucy in his remonstrance. Mr. Rarey and his party were some miles ahead at the time, but the former profited by the lesson, and left everything behind in Damascus, down to his very keys, when, merely accompanied by Major Frazer, of lion-hunting fame, and an interpreter, he spent several days in the desert in search of horse lore, riding up to each encampment he could descry, and trusting for food and a night's lodging to the sheiks of the village.

At Beyrout, on his return, he found the best Arab he had seen on his travels among a lot of twenty, which some Sardinian officers had got together on a roving commission from their king. Rhodes and Smyrna had little to show in this way; but at Constantinople there were several studs (including that of the renowned Omor Pacha), principally saddle-horses, and nowhere did Mr. Rarey find the horse better understood or more scientifically handled. The Arabs seemed to fall far short in the latter point of what he had anticipated. Their habit of sharing their tents with the foal from the very day it is dropped has given them a perfect mastery over generation after generation of horses as they arise; but their critic was strongly tempted to doubt whether they have thought out any system, or could grapple on any fixed principle with a horse that was new to them. He was more confirmed on this point by the utter helplessness and fright they exhibited when the little entire horse on which he made his last desert tour became uproarious one morning, and refused to let one of them put his bridle on. "The Prophet" was invoked in vain that time, and there was nothing for it but to send a messenger for Mr. Rarey to the tent of the sheik, and request him to leave his repast of brown bread and wild honey forthwith, and come and put matters to rights, a point of no great difficulty when the crowd of agitated turbans could be thrust back a space. He also thought their mode of putting shoes on very unartistic; but the shoes themselves seemed to conform with more exactness to the structure of the feet.

Both his views on this point and his general experiences of desert life will lend not a little novelty to the lectures which he purposes giving before he returns home to Ohio, next fall. We have had "original," "female," "Irish," and "Mexican" horse-tamers in the field since fashion first set in this direction; but still Mr. Rarey holds that vantage ground which the finest horsemen in the world have long since accorded to him, both for facing a savage or "gentling" a nervous subject into confidence. It is idle to the last degree to expect that horses will not lapse after they have received one lesson from him. Clever as he may be, he cannot checkmate nature by working a miracle. The most that he can do is to indicate the mode of treatment, and show how completely it works the desired effect in his own hands; but it is only by a constant and patient repetition of it (as in the cavalry regiments, where the most incorrigible subjects have been made permanently useful by it) that a horse can be taught to shed its old vicious habits, and cease to be a pest both in and out of the stable.

VICTORIA BRIDGE.

The progress of large works within the metropolitan districts has been of late so rapid that many of them approach completion before the public has been made aware of their commencement. Amongst the achievements of this description the construction of the Victoria Railway Bridge over the River Thames is most prominent; it has been commenced since the 8th of June of last year, and it is confidently stated that it will be open for traffic in the month of June of this year. Now, when it is considered that this bridge is as substantial as any spanning the River Thames, and that it is founded as deep as, or deeper than, any of the metropolitan bridges—that its piers are of the most substantial masonry—that each part of its massive iron arches are fitted together as accurately as the best-constructed machine or steam-engine, and that its coffer-dams have had to be placed in a deep tide-way one cannot but feel surprised, largely mixed with admiration, that even a combination of engineering skill, assisted with the utmost energy of experienced contractors, should have been able to accomplish in so short a time a structure of this magnitude, which heretofore usually absorbed years of labour.

The railway of which this bridge is so important a feature is one of the smallest in England, if we judge by length alone, but one of the most important if we take into account the multifarious objects it will accomplish, and the great combinations it will effect. The North-Western, the Great Western, the Brighton, the South-Western, the new Dover lines, will all find a common centre for the debarcation of their passengers at the central terminus at Pimlico; and although the works are in design of the most substantial and comprehensive character, yet it is almost certain a few years will develop the necessity of even great additions being made for a traffic the most extensive which has ever been concentrated in one spot.

The engineer to this great work is Mr. John Fowler, who is also the engineer to the Metropolitan Railway, the works of which we illustrated in a recent Number.

Ordnance Survey.—The engineers intrusted with the preparation of the Ordnance survey have sent in their annual report. The one-inch maps are mostly published; the six-inch maps are much less advanced. With regard to the larger scale of twenty-five inches to a mile, there still remain three-fourths of England to be surveyed, a preference having been given to Ireland and Scotland; but it is strongly recommended that this great work be completed. The cost of completing it would not exceed £1,450,000, and would probably be less. "The Principal Lines of Levelling in England and in Scotland" will be published this year, and will close the great trigometrical operations of the survey, which commenced under General Roy in 1784. This department is gradually collecting the most perfect set of maps of every part of the world. It is executing plans of the barracks and forts of this kingdom, and plans of different colonies. Among its publications will be found a map of Europe, showing the position and produce of the coalfields, and the dependence of the several States upon each other for the supply of that great munition of war; plans of Peninsular battles, and plans in illustration of the late Italian campaign, copies of which have been sent to the head-quarters of every regiment, to enable the officers to study the tactics of the armies then engaged.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 1030.—VOL. XXXVI.] SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1860. [WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

THE EMBANKMENT OF THE THAMES.

THERE has arisen a small knot of persons in public life who have started and are supporting a theory that amounts to this—that nobody but the actual, positive, and all-the-year-round inhabitants of London have any personal interest in the material ordering of the metropolis. It is seriously asserted, and somewhat insolently maintained, that the chief city, the great moral heart of England, is, for all purposes connected with its convenience, its improvement, or its beautification, in the same category with, say, Penzance or Berwick-upon-Tweed. We are actually told that it is a kind of national sin to countenance the expenditure of a shilling on this metropolis out of those national funds to which the people all over the country contribute—that is to say, the dwellers in London proper are to be taxed locally for the erection and maintenance of what, by a figure of speech, may be called a gigantic cosmopolitan hotel, for the comfortable and pleasant reception of as many millions of outsiders as choose from time to time, for their own pleasure or business, to throng into its area, without their being asked for the slightest contribution, even in the most indirect manner. It seems to have been forgotten by the unphilosophic and inconsequent holders of this doctrine that, if the arrangements of the metropolis could be managed by the phrase "London for the Londoners," one of our great social problems might be more easily approached, and with a better prospect of solution. If our provincial friends would abstain from adding their presence from time to time to the actual population of this city, however curious the effect might be, there would be some weight in the protests which are made against the application of public money to what, by a perversion of speech, are called local objects in the metropolis. Of course this is talking of an impossibility and an absurdity, because it implies the stoppage of that quick and vigorous circulation which takes its start from the great centre of our social organisation. Without for a moment advocating by the remotest implication any principle of centralisation, let us take a glance at some of the institutions which make a convergence towards the metropolis a material necessity. The people of this country are still so old fashioned as to entertain a loyal affection for their Sovereign; and we should like to know how many persons from the country come to town in the vague hope of catching a glimpse of the Queen. The Court, which is technically located in London, cannot be considered a purely local institution. How many thousands and hundreds of thousands does Parliament, not merely as a political and legislative institution, but in relation to that which is known as private business, bring from the provinces for six months of every year? Then our Supreme Courts of Law; the public offices, towards which must tend all the vast interests comprehended within the words Colonies, War, Home Department (Ireland and Scotland included); the Revenue is the population which throngs around them cockney, pure and simple! Is it for two millions and a half alone of the people of England that there have been established the British Museum, the National Gallery, the various societies for the promotion of art, science, and literature, the great medical schools; the University of London, so wide in its area, but necessarily having a metropolitan fountain-head; the Crystal Palace, the Zoological Gardens, Exeter Hall (surely at this moment no one can say that this is a local establishment), the Operas, and that long list of institutions which, while they are in their inception metropolitan, are in their essence and character national? Not to speak of the centre and turning point of the trade of the world, and insinuating a hint of the cosmopolitan nature of what is called the money market, may it be allowed to murmur that the port of London is not altogether to be taken out of consideration as the place of arrival of shipping that may be counted by thousands, of persons who may be enumerated by millions, and merchandise that can only be estimated by beginning with billions? The pertinency of these observations is connected with a subject which has been lately mooted, and the only argument against which has been derived from the doubt as to whence the necessary funds are to be derived. The question is, whether a great metropolitan improvement is an imperial or a merely local one. That question—namely, the embankment of the Thames—is now fairly before Parliament and the public. It is a fact within every one's personal experience that the streets of London are fast becoming impassable. It is a simple truth that it takes longer to get from London-bridge to the Great Western Railway than from London-bridge to Brighton, or than from the Great Western to Oxford. The relief of the traffic of the streets has been the subject of all sorts of plans and theories, but among them none seems at once so desirable and so feasible as the embankment of the Thames. This matter has been under the consideration of Committees and Commissions from so early a period as 1824, but nothing has resulted but the inevitable blue-books.

At this moment the matter has assumed a more immediate and pressing importance. The Metropolitan Board of Works is about to construct its low-level sewer, the course of which is to run under the Strand and Fleet, threatening the foundations of Somerset House and St. Paul's Cathedral, besides stopping the traffic of these thoroughfares for two years. That body, we are informed, is not unwilling to return to a plan which was once sketched by their engineer and approved by the late Mr. Robert Stephenson for taking the sewer along the banks of the river; and, if the works were to be undertaken in conjunction with the embankment and the formation of a roadway, it is believed that a better outfall, less expense, and easier construction of the work would be the result. Something has been said about the rights of the wharfingers along the river banks, and the difficulties arising out of their vested interests and the proportionate compensation. But there is in the plan proposed a course pointed out by which the business of the wharfingers would not only be undisturbed, but the facilities for carrying it on greatly increased, and an ornamental character imparted to their locations, the knowledge of which circumstances has, we understand, quite won over the suffrages of that trade, and they are even prepared to contribute towards the realisation of the scheme. It is understood, also, that in the carrying out of the embankment a large quantity of land, amounting to more than thirty acres, will be reclaimed from the bed of the river which might be made available for building purposes. This would create a fund towards the payment of the expenses of the undertaking, and ultimately go far to render it a profitable concern from a commercial point of view.

The projects which are in contemplation by different railway companies for crossing the Thames with their lines ought to be considered with due reference to an embankment of the river, which has a natural and obvious connection with the ordering and disseminating of the traffic which they are seeking to bring into the midst of London. Again, the operations of the Board of Works for sewage purposes involves the drawing away of a large quantity of water from the Thames; and this will render an embankment absolutely necessary, to put the stream into proper condition for navigation, while it would do away with those hideous and pestiferous mudbanks, which are bad and intolerable enough now, but the area of which would be vastly increased when the volume of water in the bed of the river was to a great extent reduced. In a sanitary point of view this consideration is so obvious and so patent that it needs hardly a word to be added in order to give efficacy and importance to the argument; but at the proper time the medical testimony of men like Dr. Letheby will be produced with reference to this point. It may also be mentioned that the Board of Conservancy of the Thames are not only favourable to this scheme, but are so desirous of seeing it carried out that they have expressed their willingness to devote a large portion of the revenue of the reclaimed land to that purpose.

The above remarks are intended only as a prologue to a more extended, detailed, and specific examination of this subject which it will be our duty to make on future occasions. Only the most salient points involved in the question have been glanced at; but they are, we think, sufficient to direct public attention to a most important subject, and one which we again declare to be more imperial than local in its nature and objects. The population of London is, by this time, nearer three millions than two and a half; but, when to that circumstance is added the startling statistical fact that no less than thirty millions of persons passed in and out of the metropolis by the various railway termini last year, it will be seen at once that, in addition to the locomotive requirements of the stationary inhabitants of this huge city, street accommodation is needed for this enormous migratory population. One thing is clear, that if it can be shown as it easily can, that the embankment of the Thames is a necessity, the subject will duly take its hold on the public mind, and after that there is little to fear with regard to its final accomplishment. Sir Joseph Paxton has succeeded in obtaining a Select Committee of the House of Commons to inquire into the subject, and, if that body decide that the plan is such a one as ought to be realised, there is no doubt that the necessary means will be provided.

Massacre of a Missionary Crew.—A communication received from the Falkland Islands states that some of the natives of Terra del Fuego have captured the missionary schooner Allan Gardiner, and murdered the master, the catechist, and the whole of the crew, save one, who managed to escape. The lamentable death of Captain Gardiner, after whom the above vessel was named, and the check which the mission in consequence received, are still fresh in the public recollection.

The ladies of Bologna last February opened a subscription in order to present to King Victor Emmanuel a splendid saddle, which has cost above £2000. The poorest women of Bologna have taken part in the subscription, and the saddle was presented on the 1st inst. to his Majesty. It is of red velvet, all embroidered with silver and gold. The bridle, of morocco leather, is adorned with beautiful gold ornaments, and for the front of the horse's head there is a sort of gold brooch, containing three rich jewels—an emerald, a ruby, and a diamond—forming the Italian colours.

Literature in Belgium.—By a decree of the King of the Belgians a sum of 20,000f., to be taken from the funds of the Department of the Interior, is to be divided among the authors of the best works written either in French or Flemish on the development of Belgium since 1830. A sum of 5000f. will be given for one on intellectual and moral development (literature, science, fine arts, &c.); 5000f. for the best on material progress (agriculture, industry, commerce, railways, &c.); and the remaining 10,000f. among the other works which shall not have gained the principal premiums. The Government reserves to itself the right of having the works translated which receive the premiums. The various papers must be sent to the Minister of the Interior before the 1st of May, 1863.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur of Tuesday announces that a decree modifying the project of law concerning sugars and coffee has been submitted to the Legislative Body.

A notice has been posted up at the Bourse stating that the Caisse des Dépôts et des Consignations will continue to buy 427,900f. of Rente stock per day until the 7th of June.

By command of the Minister of Justice, M. Dupin, Procureur-General, has appealed to the Court of Cassation, on grounds of public interest, against the judgment of the Imperial Court of Paris in the matter of Bishop Dupanloup and the family of Bishop Rousseau. It will be remembered that the judgment acquitted Mongr. Dupanloup on the charge of defamation against his deceased predecessor.

The operations for establishing the boundary line between France and Piedmont commenced on the 1st inst.

The camp at Châlons is definitely organised. It is composed of three divisions of infantry, a division of cavalry, three batteries of artillery, a company of engineers, three companies of drivers, a detachment of hospital mates, and a detachment of gendarmes. The troops altogether amount to 40,000 men. It is expected that the camp will become a first-rate military school. Several new theories are to be reduced to practice which are based on principles applicable to infantry, cavalry, and artillery. The experience supplied by the war in Italy, and the employment of new and powerful firearms, will give rise to some very important manœuvres which will excite no common interest throughout Europe. The camp of Châlons, like the camps of St. Omer, Boulogne, and Satory, will be visited by practical military men sent there by the various Governments of Europe to witness the manœuvres. It is expected that the Emperor will pass a considerable portion of the summer under canvas, manœuvring his armies.

The Moniteur publishes a decree fixing the individual payment for exemption from military service at 2300 francs, and the bounty on re-engagement for seven years' service at 2000 francs.

FRANCE AND SWITZERLAND.

The Federal Council has issued a fresh circular note demonstrating the strategic importance of the neutralised provinces for the maintenance of the neutrality of Switzerland.

In reply to M. Thouvenel's attempt to show that it was in favour of Sardinia, and not in the interest of Switzerland, that the neutralisation of Northern Savoy was sanctioned by the Powers that signed the Treaty of Vienna in 1815, M. A. Pietet, the son of the Swiss Plenipotentiary at Paris and Geneva in 1814 and 1815, has communicated to the Journal de Genève a series of extracts from his uncle's diplomatic correspondence, showing that it was the Genevese deputies who supported the project of neutralisation and ultimately gained for it the assent of the Congress.

The Federal Council has received a note from the French Government respecting the maltreatment and insults which had been offered to Frenchmen in Switzerland, and requesting that steps should be taken for the prevention of the same. The Federal Council has, we are informed, directed a rigorous investigation to be instituted upon the subject. A despatch from Geneva asserts that official inquiries have proved these allegations of France to be absolutely false.

ITALY.

NORTHERN AND CENTRAL ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel has made an enthusiastic progress through Æmilia. The Syndics of the Romagna presented addresses to the King, adding £200,000 as a voluntary contribution towards the expenses of the State. The clergy of Bologna also presented an address to his Majesty on the 2nd. A splendid ball was given at the theatre in honour of the King, who was most enthusiastically received. A hymn was sung by one hundred of the principal lady inhabitants. The ball was crowded. His Majesty arrived on the 4th at Modena, and went to the cathedral, where he assisted at the celebration of a "Te Deum." A great concourse of persons was assembled, by whom the King was heartily cheered. The King returned to Turin on Tuesday evening, and was met by the inhabitants, by whom he was warmly cheered.

The result of the elections which are known up to the present time shows a considerable majority in favour of the Ministry.

General Garibaldi and M. Robandi have announced to the Piedmontese Chamber their resignation as deputies for Nice.

Count Cavour has addressed a letter to the Mayor of Vintimig'ia (in answer to one in which that functionary begged to be informed whether the place in question was to be ceded to France), stating that there can be no doubt about the nationality of its inhabitants, and that therefore it is to remain annexed to the Italian kingdom, to which it has always belonged.

THE PAPAL STATES.

The Pope, by a proclamation published on Thursday week, "makes an appeal to Catholics" to subscribe to the new Roman five per cent loan of £2,000,000, of which £600,000 is said to have been already subscribed in Belgium.

The French garrison, as we are informed simultaneously from Rome and Berlin, will not leave Rome, except the Pope insists upon it. The Turin journals had announced its impending departure.

General Oudinot has given a denial to the report that he intended taking service in the Pontifical troops.

A despatch from Rome states that one thousand Irishmen have left Trieste for Ancona, in order to join the Papal army.

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.

The news from Sicily is still scanty and uncertain, but enough is published to indicate that the insurgents, fighting in an irregular manner, have maintained their ground against the Royal troops. A Neapolitan official despatch yesterday week asserted that tranquillity had been restored throughout the island; whereas unofficial accounts of the same date affirmed that the insurrection was spreading, and that the Neapolitan troops were blockaded in the principal towns, of which they retained military possession.

A new and important ally to the insurgents has appeared on the scene in the person of Garibaldi. The semi-official Patrie and Pays declare that Garibaldi (having first resigned his post in the Sardinian army) sailed for Sicily on Saturday night last. The Sardinian Government had seized his arms and ammunition, and had likewise caused the port of Genoa to be watched. But he had obtained a supply of arms which had not been landed in the Piedmontese States, and a vessel had cleared from Genoa for Malta two days previously, and had put to sea. He found means to join this vessel, which then proceeded to Sicily instead of Malta. The Opinion Nationale affirms that Garibaldi's expedition is composed of several vessels, which will assemble off the island of Capraja, and will then proceed to Sicily. As for the strength of the insurgents whom he may join, and the force which he carries wtth him, little is known, though it is asserted that Garibaldi has with him 1800 men and twenty-four cannon.

The Turinese journals publish a letter from General Garibaldi, in which he says:—"It is the duty of all to encourage, aid, and augment the number of combatants against oppression. It is not the insurrectionary party in Sicily whom we are assisting, but Sicily herself, where there are enemies to contend with. It was not I who advised an insurrection in Sicily; but from the moment that our Sicilian brethren threw themselves into the struggle I considered it my duty to assist them. Our battle cry will be, 'Italy and Victor Emmanuel!'"

The Patrie of Wednesday evening publishes the following details respecting General Garibaldi's expedition:—"Independently of the vessel of Garibaldi, two other steamers have left Genoa, having on board 1400 men, consisting principally of the former Chasseurs des Alpes, Romagnols, Lombards, and several Genoese. A fourth vessel, it is said, left Leghorn for the same destination as the others, and three vessels have started from different points, all of which would join the division out at sea. All these vessels, in order to mislead the Piedmontese authorities, had taken their papers for Malta. The expedition is reported to be organised on a very grand scale, being provided with arms, ammunition, provisions, and matériel for a campaign—in fact, with all necessary resources for sustaining a contest for several months."

Mazzini has issued a proclamation calling on the Sicilians to arm. It is remarkable for the declaration that Mazzini, sacrificing his Republican principles for the sake of Italian unity, desires to see Victor Emmanuel King of Italy.

The latest accounts from Sicily represent the insurrection as still continuing. The head-quarters of the insurgents are at Cefalu, some fifteen leagues from Palermo. The Royal troops have several times attacked this position unsuccessfully. The duty of the Neapolitan cruisers is so difficult that Garibaldi will probably succeed in disembarking.

INDIA.

The publication of an official minute in a Madras newspaper has revealed the fact that Sir Charles Trevelyan, with whom all the members of the Madras Council appear to concur, strongly disapproves of Mr. Wilson's financial proposals. Sir Charles Trevelyan thinks that an income tax and a tobacco tax will cause the greatest discontent among the native population of the Madras presidency, and that a license tax will produce an insignificant revenue. He believes that the deficit in the Indian revenue may soon be covered by the natural increase of receipts, and by a great diminution of military expenditure effected by a great reduction of the native army. He consequently thinks it unwise to irritate the minds of the people, at least in the Madras presidency, by new and burdensome taxation.

The Earl of Shaftesbury was in the chair. Representatives from nearly every diocese were present. The conference was convened, under the auspices of the Church Protestant Defence Association, for the purpose of discussing the following points:—The case of St. George's-in-the-East, Church Discipline, Extension of the Freedom of Religious Worship, Liturgical Revision, Uniformity Acts and the Law and Canons of the Church. The usual toasts were proposed, and speeches were made by Lord Palmerston, Lord John Russell, and others. The company afterwards partook of coffee in the model-room, and then separated.

A SINGULAR TRIAL took place at the Middlesex Sessions on Wednesday. A young man, who was stated to be a commissioned officer in the Army, was tried on a charge of having stolen a portmanteau which contained articles of value. The portmanteau was stolen from a train on the Great Northern line, in which its owner was a passenger, and on the same day the prisoner, with the portmanteau in his possession, put up at an hotel in Covent-garden. A cabman proved that he drove the prisoner from the railway station on the night of the robbery, he having the portmanteau with him, and a pawnbroker gave evidence that the prisoner had pawned a large portion of its contents; so that there could be no doubt either of the fact of the robbery or as to who was the thief. The prisoner, however, delivered a clever speech in his defence, in which he sought to produce the impression that he had been made the innocent victim of other parties, whose names he was bound by some mysterious obligation of honour not to divulge. But, unhappily for him, his lodgings had been discovered, and as a large quantity of other property was found in them, the Assistant Judge deferred the sentence till the next session, in order to enable the police to ascertain whether the prisoner had been concerned in any other railway robberies.

The latter corps had the honour of presenting arms to her Majesty as they were marching to the ground, her Majesty happening to be driving down Rotten-row at the same time. Among the corps brigaded were several members of the Six-foot Volunteers, and also of the Volunteer Engineers. The total number of volunteers present was nearly 2000, the South Middlesex being very strong. The usual brigade evolutions were executed with almost the precision of regular troops, and Viscount Ranelagh expressed himself much gratified with the manner in which they were performed.

LONDON UNIVERSITY.—On Wednesday, at Burlington House, took place the annual ceremony of the admission of candidates for degrees of the London University and the presentation of scholarships and prizes. The amphitheatre was filled with a company of ladies and gentlemen assembled to witness the proceedings, and the Chancellor of the University, Earl Granville, presided. The registrar, Dr. Carpenter, read a brief report, from which it appeared that at the matriculation examination of the university in the past year 254 candidates were admitted, sixty-seven candidates passed the first examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts, thirty candidates passed the first examination for the degree of Bachelor of Medicine, seventy candidates passed the final examination for the degree of B.A., ten graduates passed the first voluntary examination in the text of the Scriptures and in Scripture history, thirteen candidates passed the final examination for the degree of M.B., eleven candidates passed the examination for the degree of LL.B., thirteen candidates passed the final examination for the degree of M.A., eleven passed the examination for the degree of M.D., and one candidate obtained the degree of LL.D. THE GREAT FRAUD ON THE UNION BANK.—The criminal proceedings which have been taken against Pullinger, in connection with the gigantic frauds which he has perpetrated on the Union Bank, passed through another, and a very important, stage last Saturday, at the Mansion House. He was first charged with the embezzlement of £350, and after the evidence had been submitted he pleaded guilty, declaring that it was his intention to give no unnecessary trouble. Mr. Lyttleton was then arraigned with Pullinger on a charge of stealing a sum of £3000. Mr. Lyttleton gave a perfectly satisfactory explanation of his share in the transaction. All the entries relative to it which he inserted in his book were correctly made; what he did was done under instructions received from Pullinger, who was his superior in office, and against whose integrity of course, at that time, not the faintest suspicion was entertained; and Pullinger alone profited by the misappropriation of the money. Under these circumstances the prosecution withdrew the charge against Lyttleton, and the Lord Mayor, amid the cheers of a crowded assembly, declared that he left the court without a stain upon his character. Pullinger was committed for trial on both charges.——Last Tuesday the grand jury at the Central Criminal Court returned true bills against Pullinger; and on the same day he was placed at the bar, and pleaded "Guilty" to all the charges preferred against him. The sentence was deferred.

He takes this palace to be that of Chephrem, who built the great pyramid. No less than seven statues of this Prince have been found in the palace.

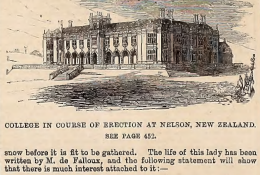
RUMOURED ROYAL MARRIAGES.—It is rumoured in the Court circles at Berlin that a double matrimonial alliance is about to take place between the princely house of Hohenzollern and the Royal house of Portugal. The current report is that the Hereditary Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, now aged twenty-five, is to be married to the younger sister of the King of Portugal, Donna Antonia, born in 1845, and that the King of Portugal will marry the younger daughter of the Prince of Hohenzollern, the Princess Marie, also born in 1845. It will be remembered that his Majesty was previously married to the sister of this Princess, the Princess Stephanie, who died last year.

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.—A variety of estimates of the Civil Service class for the year ending March 31, 1861, have just been issued. The estimate for "public works and buildings" is £621,090, being a decrease as compared with 1859 of £171,854. For "salaries and expenses of public departments" the sum required is £1,413,503, or an increase over the previous year of £8. The totals to be voted for expenses connected with "law and justice" amount to £2,565,301, being a net increase over 1859 of £20,651. For "education, science, and art," £22,541 less than was voted the previous year is asked for. The sum required is £1,305,912. The estimates for "colonial, consular, and other services" show an increase of £55,302. The sum required is £484,812. The sum of £253,610, being an increase of £10,816, as compared with 1859, is required for "superannuation and retired allowances and gratuities for charitable and other purposes."

THE KING OF SARDINIA AT BOLOGNA.—A letter from Bologna dated May 2 describes the King's visit:—"The 15,000 men of the garrison and the National Guards were all under arms at one o'clock. It had rained all the morning pitilessly; it rained at one harder than ever. Out the poor troops turned, cloaked and hooded, the bersaglieri with draggling cock feathers, the lancers splashing with streaming wet pennons, the infantry wearily tramping in six inches of mire. Towards three, however, there was something like a break in the clouds, and it had actually almost entirely ceased to rain at three, when the cannon announced that the King was one full hour before his time. The very suffering endured, the prolonged misery to which men and women had made up their minds, enhanced the thrill of joy which the first report of artillery sent through every man's heart. Here he was! The roar of the multitude preceded him, loud enough to drown the scores of drums and jingling music which greeted him at every street corner. Here he was! Here they were! A squadron of lancers, then a squadron of mounted militia, four carabineers, then the Royal travelling carriage (an open carriage), the King, with Farini on his left, with General Cialdini and a numerous staff riding in a motley retinue before, behind, and all round; then more carriages, with a mob of Court and State dignitaries; then more carabineers, lancers, and yeomanry—the cortége wet, splashed, and spattered—men and beasts, King, Ministers, courtiers, and general, one grand layer of mud; and thus they passed on down the street of San Stefano, across the Cartoleria Nuova, into the Strada Maggiore, to the Piazza del Gigante, and came to alight at the door of San Petronio. Two canons and about fourteen priests were scraped together, in sheer defiance of the rebellious Cardinal Archbishop. The "Te Deum" was sung. At the Townhall the King was accommodated with another—a drier, but, alas! a close—carriage. He thus traversed the other half of the city, went out at the gate leading to San Michele in Bosco, the famous convent on a hill half a mile from the gate—that convent being the only mansion for Royalty Bologna has to boast. The view of the gay convoy as it wound up the ascent, escorted by hundreds of prancing steeds, by hundreds of waving flags, and scarcely protected by thousands of glittering bayonets from the vast ebbing and heaving crowd which pressed and clamoured around it on all sides, is something to be remembered by all who witnessed it."

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN EARL GREY AND LORD JOHN RUSSELL.—A lively and entertaining correspondence which has passed between Lord Grey and Lord John Russell has just been published. Lord Grey, in his late anti-Reform speech, accused Lord John of having committed his colleagues to the question of Reform upon his own individual responsibility, and without previous consultation with them. The statement was universally supposed to have reference to Lord John's abortive measure brought forward in 1852, and accordingly Mr. Walpole repeated it in that sense during the recent debate on the Reform Bill. Mr. Walpole was, however, interrupted by Lord John Russell, who made the brief but emphatic remark—"It is not true." Lord Grey thereupon addresses a letter to "dear Lord John," in which he explains that he referred to a declaration of opinion made by his Lordship when Premier, some three or four years previously, and that this was the pledge which was made without the knowledge of the Cabinet, and which he deemed inexpedient. Lord John makes a caustic reply, and one not at all calculated to restore Lord Grey's equanimity. He first states that he has referred back to his speeches delivered in 1848 and 1849, and finds that they are of "a very Conservative nature"—an opinion in which he will be confirmed by the public recollection. He then rebukes Lord Grey for having divulged Cabinet secrets. The passage is so good, and at the same time so brief, that it will bear reproducing in this place:—"I have no recollection of anything which passed in the Cabinet at that time, but if I had I should not think myself at liberty to refer to any differences in the Cabinet to which I belonged without the permission of the Queen, which I have not asked, and do not mean to ask." Lord John then contrasts his defence of Lord Grey's colonial policy against the attacks made upon it in 1848 with Lord Grey's conduct in "hoarding up accusations" to be used against him eleven or twelve years afterwards. All this is preliminary to what is intended to be the most damaging part of the letter—viz., a quotation from a speech delivered by Lord Grey in 1852, in which that noble Lord not only explained the grounds upon which Lord John thought it desirable that a Reform Bill should be introduced, but expressed his own personal concurrence in these opinions. The concluding notes are exceedingly curt, but the phrases "dear Lord Grey" and "dear Lord John," are retained to the last.

LITERATURE.



THE AMATEUR FLORIST'S GUIDE (John Heywood, Manchester); THE MANSE GARDEN (Blackwood, Paternoster-row); THE GARDEN THAT PAID THE RENT (Chapman and Hall, Piccadilly); THE GARDENER'S AND FARMER'S REASON WHY (Houston and Wright, Paternoster row); THE WILD FLOWERS OF ENGLAND (Houston and Wright, Paternoster-row).

Every year is tending to prove the truth of the Baconian apothegm that "a garden is the purest of country pleasures." It has not only soothed the careworn heart of a Napoleon, but wood Mrs. Siddons for a space from tragedy to nature, and inspired the most elegant chapters that ever fell from Charlotte Elizabeth's pen. Humble as well as high life have alike owned the same gentle influence, and in Lancashire especially the taste has descended from father to son among the weavers. In "The Amateur Florist's Guide" we find the men of Hillocks bearing their part very nobly since 1725, when the ominous of the Flemish weavers who brought their tulips over with them among their household gods, dovetail themselves here and seal to the auricula. The variables soon began to be called after their own names. The Taylor family still think proudly of "Taylor's glory, white edged;" and that of the Hoyle makes all the country worthy with "Hoyle's lovely Ann, grey edged." The peculiarity of this excellent little book is that it gives a brief history of its cultivators and triumphs with each flower. In the chapter on tulips Swetchine, it is modeled on "Our Farm of Six Acres," and the "tottel of the whole" seems to be that the writer, after deducting what was charged to the house, made profits to the amount of £37 15s. The remarks on the "strange people" who will insist on calling butterflies lepidopters and rose beetles cetonias, are well worthy of attention. When we remember how Linnæus fell on his knees at the sight of a mere furze-coloured beath we almost tremble for the effect which the illustrations of such a thing as "Vanessa Io" will produce on "Vanessa" would have had on his quiet, Swedish heart, After seeing it here we feel as if we should never pass common ling again without stooping to admire it. Independantly of the pictures, poetry, and letterpress, the orange binding is most elegant and well befitting the floral offering which it encloses. The "Gardener's and Farmer's Reason Why" bears rather the stamp of a Cirencester College classbook than of one likely to find its way into the kitchens, where "Why do dunghens emit a peculiarly pungent odour" or, "What are the views of Liebig expressed in his latest work?" are queries never likely to fall on the ingate's or visitor's ear. Still, this form of conveying information has been wonderfully popular, and the style in which it discourses on every possible point from manuring with rape dust to feeding calves on turnitopes, is invaluable for those who care to trace everything to first causes, or are obliged to gird on their armour for an examination or a farmers' club discussion.

THE MAGAZINES.

Blackwood.—In an article headed "Warand Progress in China" it is said down as undeniable that an unexpected burden must accrue of military and naval operations is necessary for English Imperial interests, as contradistinguished to the mere narrow views of the native dealer and emigrant-resident, and may be most profitably carried out in Northern China—that is north of, and beyond, all our present mercantile establishments—with this twofold object:—first, to open up rich regions populated by Asiatics in a high state of Eastern civilisation, all of whom will become our customers; and that European manufactures on their minds by Englishmen appearing among them in a military character will tend to the future security and profit of our missionary and merchant. Secondly, that we have to impress upon an Eastern Court the grand fact that the defeat of the forces of Great Britain, and the slaying and wounding of four hundred fighting men of her contests, is not an act to be passed over with a tame apology without indemnity, or without guarantees against its recurrence, when perhaps some unfortunate collection of traders shall fall under the wrath of Emperor or mandarin. This theory is aptly worked out, and is well worth attention. "Judicial Puzzles" is a renewal of a class of articles which were very frequent not long ago in this magazine, and we can trace the old hand in this dissertation on a cause célèbre which is known in connection with the name of Elizabeth Canning. We have the heads of "Wellington's Career," and a very cheering and laudatory review of "The Mill on the Floss." The bantering article headed "A Feuilleton" is happily managed, and is very amusing; not the less that the humour is not too long drawn out. The paper on "Switzerland and Annexation" opened in a manner worthy of Mr. G. H. Lewes, and is besides a very good dissertation on the subject. As a whole, Blackwood holds its own and something more this month.

Fraser.—Certainly in this age, and more than ever in this country, and at this particular time, a treatise on "Compromise" is appropriate; and here we have Mr. Wyvle Martin's very interesting generality on the "terms on which every body surrenders," and illustrating the proverb "that half a loaf is better than no bread." Mr. Peacock's "Gryll Grange" proceeds in that quaint and peculiar vein for which this writer is known. The Rev. Dr. Opimian, though in a certain degree a reproduction of the same author's "Dr. Folliott," is capitally done; and the oddity of some of the grouping and characters, though great, are so managed as not to be at all outrageous. The paper on "The Dignity of Dulness" is obviously suggestive of quips at the article itself; and it may be forgiven if it is hinted that, on the whole, the subject is successfully illustrated in the mode in which it is carried out. Mr. Theodore Martin gets a very full, perhaps a little too full, share of appreciation in reference to his translation of Horace, which, however, we admit is good enough to warrant this special dedication to its merits. "The Last Prize Fight" has been attached to the dignity of a monthly notice, and the subject is treated pretty much as it has been in every other quarter—that is, with abstract condemnation of the system, but a sort of proud interest in the immediate event. We are introduced to the life and writings of Mdme. Swetchine, a very pious Russian lady, a Catholic, who has written sundry "Pensées," some essays, and some aphorisms, which she calls "Aireles," which word signifies a plant, the fruit of which requires to pass a winter under the snow before it is fit to be gathered. The life of this lady has been written by M. de Falloux, and the following statement will show that there is much interest attached to it:—

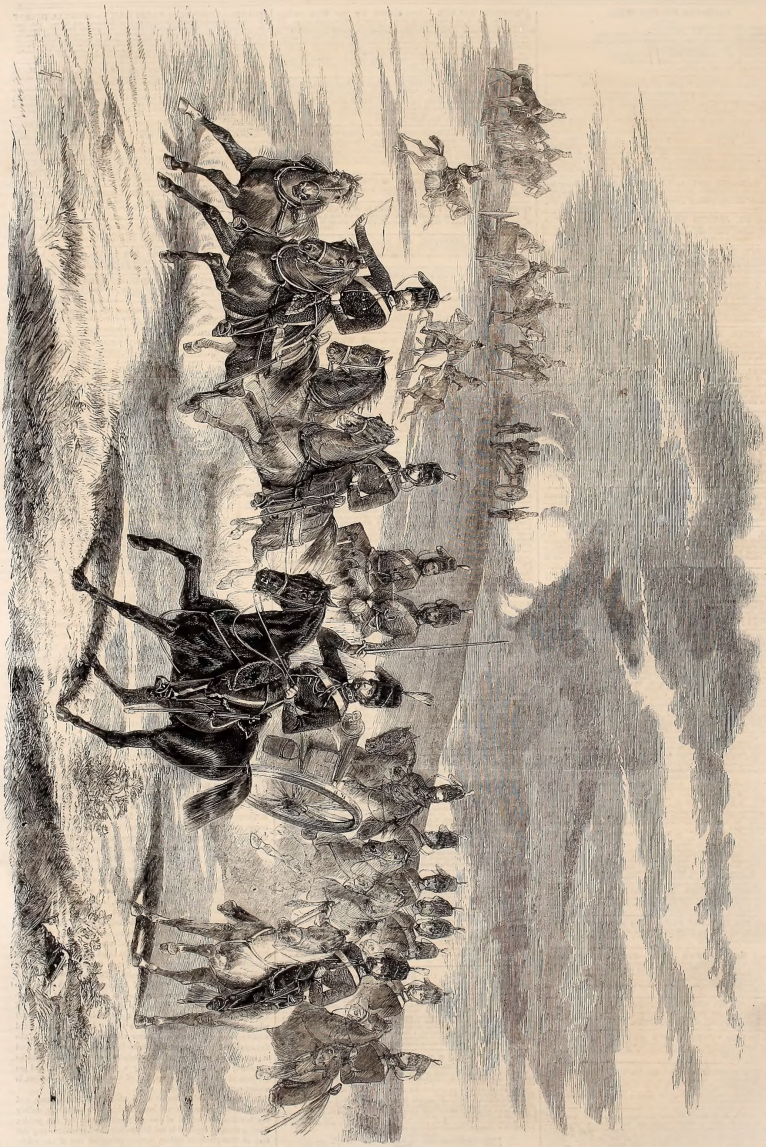
Sophie Sormont, afterwards Mdme. Swetchine, was born at Moscow in 1782. Her grandfather had been Governor of Siberia, and her father, M. Sormont, was a secretary to Catherine II. Sophie Sormont married the General Swetchine, who held an important office under the Emperor Paul I. The General declined to enter into the conspiracy against Paul, and died before the assassination of that monarch, and the succession to the throne of Alexander I., General Swetchine was suddenly deprived of his office. Still less after the occurrence of these events could the General look for any favour from the party predominant at the Russian Court, and he and Mdme. Swetchine retired to their estate in the country. Many years afterwards Mdme. Swetchine gained some influence over the Emperor Alexander. It was entirely a religious influence; but, being dreaded by certain persons at Court, old grievances were raked up against the General, and advantage was taken of some error committed by a subaltern under his orders to bring accusations against him. The General, disdaining to justify himself, resigned to leave Russia. He retired with his wife into France, where they passed the greater part of the remainder of their lives. Mdme Swetchine, however, maintained a correspondence with the Emperor Alexander, which lasted from the time of her departure from Russia until the death of the Emperor. While residing in Russia Mdme Swetchine had, after a course of careful study, become a convert from the Greek to the Latin Church, and had openly declared her conversion. During her stay in France she became an intimate friend of many of the most eminent men in that country; amongst whom may be mentioned M. Cuvier, M. de Gerando, M. Abel Rémusat, the Abbé Lacordaire, the Duc de Broglie, Father Ravignan, M. de Montalembert, M. de Torqueville, and the Count de Falloux, who has written her life and edited her works. Though her chief thoughts were given to religion, she was, in the best sense of the words, a woman of the world, taking an interest in political affairs and greatly occupying herself in practical charities. When in Russia she had been President of the Society for Succouring the Victims of War. (Présidente de la Société de secours pour les victimes de la guerre.) Naturally she was a devoted friend to the poor, and was known as "the mother of the poor." She would have been a beautiful place which did not belong to her; "Sa propriété," she adds, "which brings after it so many troubles, would cause me to renounce that repose of a Quietist which I should wish never to be interrupted by the shocks of life. I own to you while blushing at my want of simplicity that I have no love for the country. I neither care to plant, or sow, or cultivate, or embellish, and I should not be at my ease except in a place where all planting, or sowing, and embellishing were cut without my participation." It does not appear, however, that she was otherwise than an excellent mistress of serfs, and the distaste she had for the duties of a proprietor was probably acquired in the course of a careful performance of them. Indeed, in all the relations of life she appears to have been an admirable person; and her correspondence shows that she was one of the best and truest of friends. Her letters to M. de Montalembert are very striking in this respect.

The above mention does not at all include all the articles in this month's number.



The Universal Review.—The district of South America, which is known as "Chili" is regarded as the best of the capabilities of the Spanish Americans, and a standard of progress to which it has been hoped the other countries of that continent can be brought. The subject, therefore, is well worth considering, and here we have a very excellent paper in relation to it. Dr. Doran contributes one of those articles which belong to his specialty under the head of "Notes on Names and Nicknames," and it will probably strike the reader that the prevalence of the latter denomination is much more considerable in high places and in connection with notable persons than might have been supposed. The "Heroine" of the review—namely, Mr. Jeaffreon's "Sir Everard's Daughter"—is brought to a conclusion. The leading idea of the story is good, and is, we believe, founded on fact; the working out is not always equal, and wants a little more cunningness of hand than has on the whole been exhibited. We have a recurrence to a peculiar vein of this metal—namely, Russian literature, which is here illustrated by Mr. Sutherland Edwards in an article on "Russian Fairy Tales and Fabulists." The remarks on Nathaniel Hawthorne so exactly coincides with our notions of that author that we modestly abstain from praise which might after such a confession be suspicious. The severest critics and the strongest opponents of Mr. Disraeli will probably be inclined to admit that the article which is headed with his name not only displays great knowledge of the idiosyncrasy of the man, and much familiarity with the peculiarities of his position, but is, on the whole, a correct estimate of his gentleman, as a party leader, seems to us to be exact. The best article in the number of this review, in the sense of being able and exhaustive, is, we think, that on "American Literature." Of the groundwork and theory of the argument we will in this place say nothing.

The Cornhill.—The continuation of "Framley Parsonage," with which the number opens, is very satisfactory. There are bits in it that are as full of life as those in which the tale has done of late. "Campaigning in China" is eminently suggestive on the face of it, and there is a freshness in the information to be obtained from a statement of observations of a practical man "made during a march of five days, just a year ago, with a thousand men in the province of Quantung." Lord Macaulay's "Essay" is an interesting sketch of a specimen of one of our modern modes of education, and induces a hope of its being followed by others that the "Early Church" papers are intended to be coeval with the existence of the "Cornhill;" "Past is, to be sure, of the work of doom." The somewhat thin vein of Becky Sharpe, which we began to trace in Bessy Prior, in last month's number of "Lovell the Widower," is becoming more pronounced. The recent chapters of the tale are excessively amusing, but they are not in the highest tone. The patriotic suggestion with regard to a general order of merit, and the way in which the argument is put and illustrated, has, of course, found many sympathisers among the readers of whom we wonder to scrutinise ourselves. As we have before said, we always feel uncomfortable in dealing with this magazine, because really it is surrounded by specialities which make it quite out of the pale of criticism.

There is a very well-considered and cogonscant article in Colburn's New Monthly on "Toulon as a War Port;" and timid inhabitants on our south coast may be gratified to learn that Cherbourg is so decidedly pregnable as not actually to be, as a fortress on the French seaboard that great efforts are being made to make Toulon a pis aller in case of accidents. A service is done in drawing attention to "Sir Robert Wilson's Russian Journal," which is the narrative of events during the invasion of Napoleon I. and the retreat of the French army in 1812—events in which Sir Robert, as British Commissioner at the head-quarters of the Russian army, took a very influential and indeed prominent part. The continuation of the "Outre-Manche Correspondence" in Bentley's Miscellany is very well done this month. The idea—that of a Frenchman writing his views on men and things in England to a friend in Paris—is a good one; and this time the field over which he ranges is sufficiently varied and entertaining. There is a capital sketch of the life of Pelissier, Duke of Malakoff, in which the Marshal is made to appear, and apparently with cause, in a very satisfactory light; and, indeed, we believe that the notion which was formed of him in society in this country was very much akin to the estimate which is here taken of his character.

On more than one occasion we have stated that we like the downright tone of the Constitutional Press, the flavour of bitter in all its articles by no means exceeding the limits of literary tonic. There is a paper on Lord John Russell this month, which, severe as it is, is hardly more so than might be expected in a magazine which opposes such principles as those advocated in the Constitutional Press; and really there is in it some statements and some arguments which it is difficult to controvert. Of course, on such a subject as "Whig Blackmailing" the serial is in its peculiar element. The Gothic architectural question is continued, and the case for the imperial is worked with ability and much knowledge of the matter. In the Eclectic the eye will probably be caught by a paper headed "The Great Armada Fight." Not long ago the word "Armada" found its way into some discussion on the efforts of France to reconstruct and enlarge her navy; and a well-told tale of that grand story of England may, probably, now not be without its use, and certainly cannot be without interest. The portion of the subject contained in this month's number is, however, only preliminary. The rest of the magazine is quite equal to its established character. The National, in adding another to its issue of "Parliamentary Portraits," has taken Mr. Disraeli in hand, and his personal and Parliamentary qualities are photographed at the same time faithfully and gracefully.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1860.

The House of Commons by its vote on Tuesday night decreed that the paper duty was an unjust and impolitic tax, and wisely repealed the burdensome impost. It is true the majority in favour of its abolition on the third reading of the bill was not so triumphant as many sanguine persons were led to expect. But few are aware of the strenuous efforts which have been secretly made by interested individuals to defeat the Chancellor of the Exchequer's scheme. Only the initiated can comprehend the secret influence that has been exerted to overthrow this important measure—the intriguing and compromising which have been going on in order to induce the unscrupulous and indifferent to enlist into the Opposition ranks. The clique of monopolists who desire to tax the consumer for their own benefit is small; but in proportion to the smallness of their numbers has been the importunity with which they have persecuted the independent members of the Legislature, and the cunning with which they have endeavoured to corrupt. Notwithstanding, however, the active exertions of this selfish cabal the House of Commons has boldly vindicated its character, and met the wishes of the nation in an honest and liberal manner. The bill for the repeal of the paper duty has passed its third reading in the Lower Chamber, and has now only to undergo the formality of being sanctioned by the Peers of the realm. This, however, is more a ceremony than a serious matter of business, although some who regret that the measure was not lost in the Commons look forward with a faint and sickly hope to its rejection in the House of Lords. We can conceive, however, no possible danger for the bill when laid on the Lord Chancellor's table. It is a purely fiscal measure, and the Lords will never venture to meddle with the financial arrangements of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Did it involve political or social principles the question would be different; as it stands, it is only a point of revenue, and on subjects of this kind the opinion of the House of Commons is wisely considered decisive.

But there is another danger which still besets the measure, and which, if triumphant, would considerably, if not entirely, nullify the benefits the repeal of the duty will obtain for the public. Having escaped Scylla it is not impossible the Legislature may fall foul of Charybdis, or rather, having struggled out of the quicksands and whirlpools of these two deities, it may yet be allured by the song of Circe. Mr. Puller is to ask for a differential duty of one penny per pound on all paper imported into England from France. Mr. Puller is to be the Circe that would artifically allure the House of Commons back to the principles of protection. It is, therefore, necessary that the representatives of the people should be put upon their guard against the insidious manœuvres of this gentleman and his friends. The question now simply is, having struck off the fetters of monopoly, are we to reimpose them for the benefit of a class of protectionists? The complaint put forth by them is that the trade will be ruined if it is compelled to compete with France without being swathed and swaddled in the nursing bands of protection. In France, rags are cheaper; in France labour is cheaper. This is the burden of their grievance, and these false seers of evil prophesy the ruin of our paper-manufacturers, the destitution of thousands of families, and the desolation of the paper-mills, the nest, woodbined cottages that cluster around them, and the pretty villages that now flourish by the brook side. But all this is mere sentimentalism. If in France labour is cheap and rags are cheap, we would simply reply, that everybody who has studied the question knows that there is no trade to be purchased on the other side of the Channel, and that in Great Britain machinery and enterprise and capital are abundant! We have refused to foster the factories of Manchester and Birmingham by import duties on foreign cotton or hardware; but we have fostered our industry with the innumerable busy hives which swarm around them. Been reduced, in consequence, to mouldering and deserted ruins? The same energy, the same ingenuity, the same command of resources which enable Birmingham and Manchester to outdo the other marts of the world will enable the paper-manufacturers successfully to vie with their competitors on the other side of the Channel, both in the quality and the price of their produce. At this very time the English manufacturer of paper is told by the Frenchman on neutral ground in America and beats him fairly in open competition. They will contend henceforth with unfettered limbs. The outcry originally was that the impost on paper, had it was not the greatest drawback. The only surveillance of the Board of Excise, the delays and the annoyances caused by the intrusion of a Government officer, it was pretended, were a far more serious grievance. From this day, however, the paper-manufacturer is left to himself and to them. There will be no prying individual peeping into their mills to report progress and to take the measure of their industry. Their ingenuity and activity will be allowed to expand, only to be limited by their own skill, or confidence, or want of it, to the end that it is impossible for us to compete with France, because rags, the raw material, are so cheap in that country, the argument has been so frequently refuted that we are really ashamed to notice it again. There are, however, those who think that it is not known fact that England has annually exported rags in considerable quantities, and this is a proof that there can be no dearth of material at present in this kingdom. But why are our paper-manufacturers so anxious for the rags of France? There is scarcely no other country in the world where people wear shirts, and where, shirts being worn, they become old? It is absurd to argue as to narrow a circle, when it has been demonstrated repeatedly that the world is the market, from every corner of which these rags may be collected; and, if foreign ports are closed against us, have we not India, with two hundred and fifty millions of human beings, all clad in cotton, at our command, and whence we may draw an inexhaustible supply?

All statistics prove, however, that of late years the consumption of paper has increased weekly, and that, despite this important fact, the number, the power, and the material, of one sort and another, more abundant than ever. Under any circumstances there will never be no possible reason why we should revert to the system we repudiated fifteen years ago and tax the nation for the benefit of a dozen individuals. We have refused to do this for the agriculturist; we have even recently discarded the old principle for the distillers, the hop-growers, the weavers, and the corkcutters—industries with far greater interests at stake—and shall we now go back to a system of taxation and impose a duty on paper for the purpose of putting hundreds of thousands annually into the pockets of a selfish clique, and but a very few thousand pounds—less, in fact, than the income of many country gentlemen—into the Exchequer? This is not confined to the manufacturers of the paper trade itself. But the imposition of a penny import duty will act as a blight upon the aspirations of authors and the enterprise of publishers, whilst the manufacturers themselves, secure of protection, will fail to throw their whole energies that amount of zeal and talent which competition would have compelled them to do. Reviewing, therefore, all the facts of the case, we feel certain that the House of Commons cannot prove so false to its great principle of sixteen years' standing as to consent to adopt the motion of Mr. Puller. A battle will be fought over that question; but, as the Ministers are pledged to fight it out uncompromisingly, we can foresee but one issue to the struggle. The House of Commons is bound in honour, remembering the tradition of the past and the glorious career of prosperity for this country which free trade inaugurated, to reject the proposition once for all, by a large, nay, an overwhelming, majority. The liberal members have but one course to pursue, and if the amendment be pressed to a division the list will be anxiously consulted by every constituency to see whether its representative in Parliament upholds the tenets of Free Trade or echoes the resuscitated cry of Protection.

RID of the Reform Bill for a month, the House of Commons has returned to budget questions—paper and wine have had their turn, and Mr. Disraeli has had an opportunity of "firing away good stores" at Mr. Gladstone, whom the former gentleman evidently will have entirely failed as a financier, and to be not much of a logician, though skilful at embrowding himself in the "glittering robes of eloquence." A discussion raised by Mr. Walter, in consequence of a question put by the handsomest compliments to gentlemen who contribute to the press, and who his Lordship was obliging enough to say were, from their talents and information, acceptable in the best society in the world. Mr. Disraeli was of about the same opinion, and, in reference to press attacks upon himself, said that if they were true he had no objection to a little malignity. Mr. Horsman talked the usual nonsense about the "anonymous," as if there were any anonymous in journalism beyond the adoption of the common form of phraseology for the avoidance of the egotistic first person. His absurdity and self-contradiction were sufficiently rebuked in the House to require no additional comment. In the Lords the Prayer-book question was brought on by Lord Ebury, but Bishops of all phases came to the rescue, and the mild Evangelicism of the Primate, the High-Church vigour of the Bishop of Oxford, and the sound, common sense of the Bishop of London were all arrayed against the astounded ritual reformer. All agreed that, as nobody could agree upon alterations, things had better remain as they are, and the Prayer-book is to be intact.

The Sicilian revolution would seem to have begun in earnest. General Garibaldi has thrown himself into the cause, and with arms and men is working against the existing tyranny. Massini proclaims that "the hour has struck," and that the Italian should fly to arms, and add their country to the united Italy under the brave King to whom M. Mazzini now proffers allegiance. The Sardinian Government makes show of displeasure and disavows sympathy with the Red Republican party, but is very vigorous in repressive measures, though in the event of Sicily freeing herself, and seeking annexation to Sardinia, a new complication of difficulties will arise. It will be a question how far France and Austria will permit the aggrandisement of a friend of Victor Emmanuel's power. Meanwhile every one must wish success to those who are seeking to put down the horrible and ignoble despotism of the Neapolitan Government. The Pope is stated to be in a bewildered state, and to regard the present crisis as but with a hopeless dismay. It is said that his Holiness's hea lth is very unsatisfactory, and that he is compelled to have recourse to stimulants and other powerful support. Antonelli is thought to foster his evil genius, whose fate is governed by chance.

Who is to be the American President? The question is virtually settled, it is believed; but the news has not, while we write, reached us. The next mail will probably bring it. Mr. Douglas's friends are by no means confident that he will carry were; but his chances were still held to be better than any one else's. It may be a comfort to know that, although this gentleman—whose sobriquet in the States is the Little Giant—has considerably declined in the estimation of the Democratic party, believed by his admirers that this was done only for political purposes, and that "the Douglas heart is true." The intended marriage between the niece of the present President of America and Lord Lyons excites much interest, and it is hoped that treaties of loyalty every four years, produce a certain amount of good feeling in society in the States.

At home nothing of interest has been excited by the announcement of the Royal prizes for rifle-shooting, and there is no reason to believe that the Wimbledon muster will be a very remarkable one. As it is in every one's power to qualify himself for competition, there is no reason why "a splendid assortment" of crack shots should not appear on the field. The alleged private grievance about the rank of the officers not being recognised at Court appears to be based on a mistake; such, at least, is a Ministerial explanation in the Lords. It would be most impolitic to discourage and annoy the volunteer by any such declaration with implied in the supposed regulation; nor can we understand how a gentleman who, giving his best zeal and ability to soldiership, is elected by his comrades, his gentlemen, as their officer, with the approval of the Queen, should not be entitled to the rank this conferred as the son of any retired buttermonger or tailor who has bought young Fitzlord or Fitzcabbage into the army with money. We are quite willing to see Dorset or other illustrate trouncing. We hope that an official declaration will settle the question at once and for ever.

Inhabitants of the Strand must be delighted to hear that when their term comes for the Serpent, the gentlemen as their worship will take such order with them as will make that thoroughfare impassable at some points for about two years. And inhabitants of England will be still more interested in hearing that the huge tunnel which is to pass under the Thames between Whitehall and Great Queen Street House and a good part of St. Paul's Cathedral. So said our Prime Ministers in the House of Commons on the occasion of Sir Joseph Paxton's motion for a Committee to consider the Thames embankment question. Their speech has been regaled with such rapidity that it deserves mention in a London chronicle, a fortnight having sufficed to lay the massive stonework from end to end. In four years the traffic of Fleet-street has worn down the old pavement, and the new is already in a bad way. Such is our topography let us mention that Mr. Hope writes to say that workmen have this week discovered a number of bones near Connaughtplace, and that he supposes them to indicate the site of Tyburn Tree.

The East Norfolk Militia, which has been assembled during the last three weeks for the purpose of training, has had varied training and exercise, has been again disembodied.

The Quarterly sermon of his Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire will be preached by the Bishop of Ripon, at St. Mary-le-Bow Church, Cheapside, on Thursday morning next.

Mr. J. Ashton Bostock has presented to the Royal Society the electrical machine constructed by Dr. Priestley, which had been bequeathed to him by Dr. Priestley's son, Joseph Priestley, Esq., of Northumberland House, and figured in Rees's "Cyclopædia."

"THE GRAND NATIONAL ENGLISH LOTTERY OF 1860."—By a communication from the Board of Trade we are informed that two packets of papers, purporting to be English lottery tickets, printed in Spanish, were lately picked up by the Coast-guard on the beach between Deal and Walmer. The packets were directed to Mchachill, whose names are printed at the bottom of each ticket, known nothing of the matter, and have given the police all the information in their power. Among money from the pockets of the orchestra. The face of the tickets bears the following inscription:—"Gran Lotteria Nacional Inglesa de 1860. Numero . . . Billete entero . . . 2,000 reales vellon. Veinte Reales Vellon.—Destinada para el billete de doble numero para el billete de cuarto de calibre en Londres en dia Viernes primero de Febrero de mil ocho cientoy sesenta.—Bitchchill Hermanos, Tesoreros.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

NEW INDUCTION-MACHINES.—In consequence of the introduction into Paris of a new machine invented by an American mechanic, and a regulation by M. Jamin and other philosophers, M. Ruhmkorff has, in a short space of time, made several different and very important improvements on his usual, and at once good.

STEARN'S Wedge of perfect whiteness has been made by M. Reisig. The straw is cut up into small pieces. Its extractive matters, silica, &c., are got rid of by the successive action of water, soda, lime, and carbonate of soda. The now soft, flexible fibre is washed and boiled into a pulp, to which is added a little sulphate or hydrochlorate acid. After a few hours it is deodorized by hypochlorite of magnesia. When the chlorine has been removed by ammoniacal gas, the pulp is fit for preparation for the machine.—Dingler's Polytechnische Journal.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor Austen delivered the second lecture on Physical Geography on Thursday (last week), the subject being Central Africa and Australia. He described the physical geography of the continent of Africa at some length, contrasting it with the state of knowledge twenty years ago. He traced the course of travellers into the interior, and the results of those explorations, proving in each case that there is no such central range of mountains as had been previously believed; and that all the peculiarities of climate and the difficulties of access arise from there being an outer wall or coast range of moderate elevation bounding a remarkably level interior. In the hilly and broad depression; which in Africa is well watered and has numerous lakes, but in Australia is almost entirely destitute of water and barren. The lecture was illustrated by large maps lent by the Royal Geographical Society. Earthquakes will be the next subject of lecture.

MR. EDWIN LANKESTER delivered the Friday evening discourse, "On Bread and Bread-making," on Friday evening last. He said: "Bread is a substance which is prepared from various seeds. The former may be either fermented or unfermented; the latter, unless otherwise specified, are fermented bread is made from the flour of wheat, rye, barley, oats, or rice, unfermented bread. The structure and chemical composition of wheat-flour were considered, and illustrated. The grain of wheat is the fruit of the plant, and the coats of the fruit and the outside of the seed constitute the bran; the white interior portion of the seed is the superfine flour; but it contains a nitrogenised flesh forming principle called gluten, or gliadine, which, when fermented, gives bread its brown colour, gives less colour in unfermented bread. The processes of making fermented and unfermented bread were described. In the former case, the fermentation is made by mixing water containing carbonic acid with wheat flour in a dough. The carbonic acid is generated by the aid of yeast, which, in the proper quantities of the flour are unchanged by this process. In fermented bread a portion of the starch is converted into sugar and alcohol, which are produced by means of vesiculation. The starch is fermented bread is more easily converted into sugar by the mouth and stomach, and thus more easily digested; but it is more prone to acid decomposition, and thus disagrees with some persons, to whom the use of unfermented bread may be advantageous. The process of baking was examined, and a description given of a new oven which admits of the introduction of steam, and thus produces a moist fire from hard crust. This mode of baking had been recently adopted by Mr. Bonham, of Regent-street. Mr. Lankester considered that the use of fermented process are the saving of a small proportion of the starch which is converted into sugar and alcohol, and the production of a more digestible and delicious effect arise from eating unfermented bread, there is no doubt that the more general adoption of the process of making bread unfermented would cause a reduction in price. The reason for the introduction of alum into bread was then discussed, and, as there is of no advantage in manufacturing bread, its disuse may be regarded as an advantage in the new process.

MR. F. A. ABEL (of the Royal Laboratory, Woolwich Arsenal) on Saturday last delivered his third lecture on the association of Heat with Chemical Action, the subject on the nature and effects of continuous and explosive chemical changes. Explosions of combustible gases are unstable in their nature. The oxides of chlorine, bromine, and iodine, for example, readily undergo explosive decomposition when subjected to the action of light. If brought into contact with substances possessing powerful affinities for oxygen, they undergo rapid explosive change. If the oxygen exerts, under those circumstances, a much more rapid and intense action upon the substances with which it is brought in contact than when, if they were to be submitted to its influence when in the ordinary gaseous condition. Mixtures of such compounds as metallic elements with oxygen (such as nitric and chloric acids), either free or in combination with bases) and all metallic oxides which are capable of yielding, by the action of their oxygen, will act as oxidising agents. The powers of an oxidising agent are found to be the reduction of such substances as sulphur, charcoal, &c., are regulated partly by the physical properties of the substance to be oxidised and partly by the facility with which the oxidising agent undergoes decomposition. An account was given of the most important oxidising agents of the present day, and the chief explosive substances were experimentally shown.

DR. BENCE JONES on Tuesday last gave his third lecture on "The Herbivorous Mammalia in the Zoological Gardens," the subject being especially the habits of the ruminating tribes of the ox, goat, and antelope tribes (with graphic illustrations, partly by Captain Harris). The Brahminee bull, or zebu, was first considered, and the sacred character in India, and consequent tampered life and dangerously irregular habits, duly noticed. The peculiarities of the hair and udder were next described. The distinctions between the bridled gnoo and the common gnoo (one of which latter has been added to the gnoo-room) were pointed out, as well as their whole gentleness, whereby they are enabled to escape from their dreadful enemy the lion, by their extraordinary speed and activity. The Indian Bison, a especial regard to the hope of its naturalization in Bushey Park, was then considered. The Cape buffalo, or "wild ox," having been pronounced excellent by those persons discharged from the Crimea, the Cape buffalo was then considered in favour. In conclusion, some remarks were made on the affinities of the ruminant family. The next lecture will be on camels.

"A FAIRY TALE," BY F. WYBURD, IN THE EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 433.

SIR CHARLES LOCK EASTLAKE, P.R.A.

CHARLES LOCK EASTLAKE was born at Plymouth on the 17th of November, 1793. He was the youngest son of Mr. George Eastlake, Solicitor to the Admiralty, and Judge Advocate at Plymouth. This gentleman was one of the earliest of that patriotic and enlightened band, to which Brougham and Birkbeck have since belonged, which espoused the cause of public education; and was the founder of the Public Library at Plymouth. The same feeling prompted him to give his sons the best education in his power. Charles, accordingly, was sent to the Charterhouse School, but had not been there long before the example of his fellow-townsman Haydon stimulated him to the adoption of the fine arts as a profession, in which he has since occupied so distinguished a position. It was in 1807 that Haydon exhibited his first picture, a "Rizpa," the fame of which reached young Eastlake's ear, and, having then not yet attained his fifteenth year, he addressed his father entreating to be allowed to leave school and study the art of painting. This desire was at once complied with, on condition that he should for a time continue his classical studies with a private tutor. His industry and earnestness in the acquirement of learning showed that his desire to become a painter was no pretext for relinquishing school pursuits, and enabled him to turn his time at this important period of life to valuable account. Meanwhile he had made sufficient progress in drawing to admit him as a student at the Royal Academy, where he attracted the favourable notice of Fuseli, himself a scholar, and who worthily filled the offices of Keeper and Professor of Painting in that institution.

About this time, through his family connections, our subject became acquainted with Mr. Jeremiah Harman, who had a fine collection of paintings. That gentleman gave him the commission for his first picture, "The Raising of Jairus's Daughter," for which he paid him a liberal price. After painting other pictures and several portraits he was sent by this kind patron to Paris, where he spent some months studying and copying from the works of art then collected in that capital, which, however, he was compelled abruptly to quit on the return of Napoleon from Elba. In the course of the same year (1815) after the battle of Waterloo, and while the young artist was employed painting portraits in his native city, Napoleon appeared in the port of Plymouth on board the Bellerophon. Mr. Eastlake took advantage of every glimpse he could obtain of the ex-Emperor to made sketches of him, by the aid of which he executed a picture of Napoleon—the size of life—at the gangway of the Bellerophon, attended by some of his officers. This work attracted great attention, and was so well sold as to enable the painter to proceed to Italy upon his own resources. He then, in 1818, proceeded to Greece, on a commission from Mr. Harman, to make sketches of the architectural remains and scenery of that classic soil. In part of these journeyings he was accompanied by Brockedon, the painter (too early cut short in the path of fame), and Charles Barry, the architect, whose subsequent career has been so distinguished and so eminently favoured by fortune. On his return, after nearly a year's absence, having visited Malta and Sicily in the course of his tour, Mr. Eastlake painted a picture of "Paris receiving the Apple from Mercury," figures life size. Shortly afterwards, on the death of his father, he returned to Rome, where he became much occupied in painting a class of subjects illustrative of the local features, inhabitants, and customs of modern Italy. His first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1823, his earliest contributions having been scenes in which public buildings, as the Castle of St. Angelo, St. Peter's, &c., were a principal feature. He soon followed these with subjects taken from Italian life in the neighbourhood of Rome. Amongst these, subjects of banditti life, then much in vogue with travellers and readers of travellers' adventures, occupied a prominent position, and ever commanded attention by the vigour and originality thrown into them as well as by their artistic merit. In 1825 his "Girl of Albano leading a Blind Woman to Mass" evinced the artist's power over subjects of a more refined sentiment. But the commissions which poured in upon him for these Italian subjects threatened to condemn him to a monotony of style from which it required a strong effort to detach himself in favour of a higher order of subject. Commissioned by the Duke of Devonshire, he painted a picture on the story related by Plutarch, of Iolas, the Spartan, who, appearing in a battle undraped and armed with sword and spear, was mistaken for a god. This picture, consisting of numerous figures, and of medium gallery size, occupied the painter nearly two years, and produced considerable sensation amongst the artists and dilettanti at Rome. In England it was not so popular, not so generally appreciated; but its merit was acknowledged by the Royal Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in 1827. In 1828 appeared "Pilgrims Arriving in Sight of the Holy City," one of the artist's most successful pictures of this class, and so well known by the engraving. About this time, captivated by Venetian colouring, he painted some subjects of half-figures, life size, sometimes of chival-rous character, sometimes taken from the picturesque peasantry of Italy. Of about this period may be mentioned "Gaston de Foix," and an "Arab Selling his Captives;" pictures of a higher class than his banditti and contadini. But in a still higher range was a small picture from Spenser's "Fairy Queen," after completing which he was, in 1830, elected a Royal Academician. In the same year he returned to England, and established himself in London.

The subjects now treated by him were undertaken chiefly to turn to account his materials from the costume and scenery of modern Greece. Of these his "Greek Fugitives" is well known by the engraving. Another large picture, "Greek Captives," has not been engraved. He varied his studies at this time by portrait-painting, and by his favourite half-figures in the Venetian style. He also occasionally treated small fancy subjects, and historical and modern Italian subjects. His "Escape of Francesco da Carrara," which has been engraved, was twice painted by him, one example of it being in the Vernon Gallery. His favourite subject, of "Pilgrims Arriving in Sight of the Holy City," previously mentioned, was also in so much demand that he produced no less than seven versions of it, all differently treated. Latterly, however, he was so continually applied to for repetitions of his works, in which respect he may be likened to Scheffer, that he at length renounced the practice as interfering too much with the exhibition of his works.

A new and important change now took place in the artist's style; scriptural subjects engaging his attention, which he treated with a poetic spirituality of conception, a noble aspiration after ideal beauty in his sainted celestial personages, and a refinement of taste in all the treatment, which have not been surpassed since the days of early Italian art. Of this new and elevated order of subjects his "Christ Blessing Little Children" was the first important example. But the most perfect specimen of his religious art was originally the "Christ Weeping over Jerusalem," which was repeated by the artist, one example of it being in the Vernon Collection. His "Hagar and Ishmael" was again and again repeated. The "Christ Weeping over Jerusalem" is also generally known by the fine mezzo-tint engraving of it by Cousins. The picture of "Christ Blessing Little Children" was for many years in the hands of Mr. Watts, the engraver, whose highly-finished work has been recently given to the public.

But while these works were extending his reputation as a painter it became generally known to those whose society he frequented that Mr. Eastlake possessed no common attainments in letters, and a mind of singular clearness and vigour, combined with great aptitude for business, so rarely met with in combination with genius for the arts. This union of qualities attracted the notice of the late Sir Robert Peel, who recognised in Mr. Eastlake one singularly fitted for what might be called those civil functions of art which require both the man of learning and the man of business. Accordingly, in 1841, on the appointment of a commission consisting of twenty noblemen and gentlemen, and presided over by Prince Albert, for the purpose of promoting the fine arts in the decoration of the new palace of Westminster, the office of secretary was offered to Mr. Eastlake and accepted. That so little has been accomplished as the result of the now nearly twenty years' deliberations of this commission to redound to the honour or credit of, to the encouragement, of the arts of the country is not the fault either of the industrious secretary or the arts themselves.

The position of secretary to a body thus established for the purpose of giving a variety of commissions to artists, and leading necessarily to continu contact with a class of minds always of a highly-sensitive nature, was necessarily one requiring no small gift of discretion and courtesy; and there is no doubt that the exercise during many years of these indispensable qualities, in addition to the known influence enjoyed by Mr. Eastlake over the illustrious and noble personages comprising the board of which he was secretary, led in a main degree, and independently of all consideration of his position as an artist, to the election of the Royal Academy, which, in 1850, elected Mr. Eastlake their president; when, the election having been confirmed by her Majesty, he received the honour of knighthood. Sir Charles's presidency, up to the present time, has been marked by the concession of one or two reforms which the public voice had, amongst many others, long demanded, tending either to enlarge the usefulness of the Royal Academy as an institution, or to curtail the privileges of its members as a class—such as the admission of engravers to full membership, and the abrogation of the "wrangling days," which were complained of as giving undue advantage to the privileged few over their compeers "outside."

Meanwhile Sir Charles Eastlake's pen had not been inactive in the service of art. His "Materials for the History of Oil Painting," a modest title for a work of so much research, has been warmly welcomed by those most intimately aware of the requirements of such a subject. Of this work the first volume only has appeared, published in 1847, referring almost exclusively to the technical mysteries of the art. It was followed in 1848 by "Contributions to the Literature of the Fine Arts," a collection of papers written for the Quarterly Review, and for the Report of the Commission of Fine Arts, &c., which had more reference to defining the philosophy of art.

The amount of knowledge both of the principles and practice of art, so rarely found in combination, thus shown to be possessed by Sir Charles might seem to have eminently qualified him as a guide in all that concerned the acquisition and preservation of the art treasures of the nation. Accordingly, Mr. Eastlake was appointed Keeper of the National Gallery, on the death of Mr. Seguin, in 1843, a post which he resigned in 1847. In 1850, on the invitation of Sir Robert Peel, he was appointed one of the trustees of the Gallery, chiefly on account of his knowledge of the Italian masters. He has since been appointed director, under a greatly-extended form of organisation. Of the success which has attended Sir Charles Eastlake's labours in these various capacities it is not our province nor our wish to speak critically in this article. The picture-cleaning question, at one time agitated with so much virulence, is still a moot point with some and the work done would not at this time be made better or worse by any observations we could offer upon it. In the selection of pictures for purchase, if he has not always been fortunate enough to satisfy all tastes, we have no doubt he has invariably been actuated by the purest motives and the sincerest desire to give value and completeness to a collection avowedly and glaringly deficient in many important particulars. Those who know the difficulties to be encountered in filling up the blanks in a large and important collection of this kind, in the face of the competition of other collectors, and the intrigues and tricks of picture-dealers, will be forward to make allowances for any shortcomings or failures which must inevitably attend the most zealous discharge of public duty; whilst those who are most forward to denounce such shortcomings are frequently of that class which has directly contributed to the contrivances and difficulties which have resulted in them.

Sir Charles was married, in 1849, to Miss Rigby, a lady of eminent intellectual qualities, and author of the "Baltic Letters" and other works.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

THE remarkable debate and still more remarkable division in the House of Commons on the Paper Duty Bill, on Tuesday evening, was a palpable evidence of the renewed organisation and adroit leading of the Conservatives. Everything betokened the setting of a trap for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In the early part of the evening there was the thinnest of Houses, evidenced by an attempt to count out, and there was much doubt whether the Paper Duty Bill would come on at all. It is probable that the managers of the Opposition were aware that there was a dinner party somewhere at which many of the Ministers, Mr. Gladstone included, were to be guests, as was observable afterwards to the uninitiated by the appearance of two-thirds of the Cabinet in evening costume. Mr. Gladstone had closed the debate on the Wine Licenses Bill at a late hour on Tuesday morning with a lengthened and vigorous speech; he appeared before the Committee on Packet Contracts at midday, and was under examination for a long time; he was in the House at its sitting, and went away at half-past seven with a lingering and reluctant air after an earnest consultation with Mr. Brand, the whipper-in;" and returned at a quarter past nine o'clock, having gone through the social duty of sitting as long as he could spare at some good man's feast. Late on Monday night, and without public notice, Sir Stafford Northcote had put an amendment to the third reading of the Paper Duty Bill on the notice-book which was insidiously directed to its destruction. At about half-past nine or so, the rest of the business having been disposed of, this bill was called on. At this time there were very few of the supporters of the Government present, but the Opposition benches were better occupied. While Sir Stafford Northcote was speaking the members of that party came in, and by the time he had finished they were arrayed in that compact and serried order, filling every available seat, which their discipline on due occasions enables them to maintain. The Ministerial benches shortly became tolerably full, but were not packed—far from it—during the whole evening. It was now palpable that a coup had been planned for which Ministers were not prepared; and the continual flitting in and out of the Government managers of the House, coupled with the assumption by Mr. Brand of that ghastly smile which whippers-in in difficulties think it necessary to preserve on their countenances, showed that there was to be what is called a squeak for it. The tone of the debate was dead against the bill, not merely as regarded its actual opponents, but its supporters were flurried and clearly unprepared for the struggle that was imminent. When, however, Mr. Edward Ellice rose, and, with the authority of a Parliamentary Nestor and in the voice of a Parliamentary Stentor, thundered out his denunciation of the whole principle involved in the remission of the duty, the Treasury bench was fluttered, and the Bentincks, and Lord Robert Cecils, and others of the extreme Conservatives, who, especially in the former case, by their gestures, and their sneering laughs, and ironical cheers, act as the fuglemen of the Opposition, grew quite hilarious.

At length Mr. Gladstone rose, his countenance sicklied o'er with a pallor which was intensified by his white cravat and suit of solemn black, and looking worn, wearied, and anxious. He had evidently wound up his unstrung nerves and depressed physical energies to a desperate effort; and, certainly, there never was a more gallant struggle against a combination of vigorous opposition, half-hearted support, and personal weakness and languor than he exhibited. Nevertheless, there ran through his speech a tone of doubt and uncertainty as to the issue, which alternately caused him to be reckless in argument and beseeching in appeal; and ever and anon, as satirical comments and ironical cheers arose from the front Opposition bench, where Mr. Disraeli sat radiant, and taking hugely-written notes on large pieces of paper, which he spread out, like linen bleaching on a lawn, on the box before him, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stopped and turned like a lion at bay. It was a magnificent but painful sight, for there was no mistaking that the contest had taken such a turn that, like that famous speech of Chatham in which, though dealing with the general topic, "every word was Murray," the attack was more personal against Mr. Gladstone than against the measure itself. By giving way to Mr. Thomas Baring for a brief space Mr. Disraeli lost nothing of the vigour and intensity of his reply, for the great merchant prince is an impressive and energetic speaker, and he helped to intercept the force of Mr. Gladstone's highly-wrought peroration; and the comparatively calm and measured manner in which the leader of the Opposition began was perhaps a more tactical opening to his speech than might have been the case if he had rushed at once at his adversary. It might, perhaps, be going too far to say that Mr. Disraeli, as an orator, is a master of personality, sarcasm, and invective, and nothing else; but such an assertion would be very near the truth. He has a singularly happy knack of blurting out, as if they were wholly unprepared—which most likely they are not—phrases which are as startling by their novelty as they are pointed in their meaning; such, for instance, as when, in an airy parenthesis, he talked of the "mysterious dogmatism" of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and this and its like, he poured out in one long stream right across the table upon Mr. Gladstone, who lay back in a recumbent position on his seat, with his eyes closed, and probably with a fearful effort of self-command, never moved or stirred until the close of his critic's speech, when he rose, and in a few words, simple but most expressive, from the deadly and unnatural calm with which they were delivered, gave the lie to Mr. Disraeli as plainly as the forms of the House and the courtesy of the occasion allowed. As the long train of those who voted against the bill passed along the front Opposition bench member after member paused before Mr. Disraeli and spoke words of praise and congratulation, and one or two looked as if they would fain have shaken hands with him if he would have allowed them to take such a liberty, which he never does, while he, for the first time, suffered himself to be guilty of "nods and becks and wreathed smiles," and his countenance spoke as plainly as a face could that he hoped that he had vindicated his right to that thorough restoration to the leadership of his party which, report says, has recently been questioned, and, still more recently, formally and entirely recognised. Indeed, it would seem as if the great stroke of Tuesday night was the result of that reconciliation and reorganisation which it is said has been lately effected between Mr. Disraeli and some of his revolted followers. Accompanied as this debate was by singular incidents and cross-purposes, it was not to end without an occurrence more out of the way than all the rest; for, by one of those mistakes which, during large and crowded divisions, happen to most members once at least in the course of their Parliamentary lives, the seconder of the resolution by which the House two years ago condemned the paper duty, and on which its remission has now been technically founded, got into the wrong lobby, and, in conformity with the rules of the House, was absolutely made to record his vote against a measure of which he has, in and out of Parliament, been one of the most consistent and steady supporters.

When the debate on the Reform Bill had faded like a dissolving view the House seemed to draw a long breath of relief. A month's repose from the fret and fever which the position created was heartily welcomed. Nevertheless, the last night's debate was a good one. It would be blamable not to allude to the admirable appearances made on that occasion by the two members who resumed the discussion. Mr. Kenneth Macaulay has, as far as we recollect, never before taken a formal part in a formal debate; and all we can say is, that he will be fully justified hereafter in taking up a more prominent attitude than he has hitherto assumed, for he exhibited all the qualities which go to make up a crack Parliamentary debater, which were by no means deteriorated by a slight modest nervousness which is anything but unbecoming in one who is what is called a young member. Mr. Gregory fairly took the House by surprise. Everybody who knows anything about him is aware that he is a smart man of the world enough, and he has of late acquired a sort of flickering prominence as a member. But no one supposed that he was master of the capabilities which go towards making up a long, argumentative, well-illustrated, and cognoscent speech, or that he would even at times rise into something very near eloquence. It was well known that the bill had got into such a strait that, if any erratic member had moved its rejection, no one can say what would have been the result. The Government advocacy had halted and fluttered uneasily night after night, and at last it was resolved that what the Spanish actors called the gracioso, or what English comedians designate the "star" of the company, should be put up to retrieve their doubtful fortunes. And so, with an air "melancholy and slow," Mr. Gladstone at length rendered himself to the discussion; and, though somewhat constrained at first, and seeming as if he were only dutifully redeeming a pledge, he was roused by the aspect of the strangers' department, which was crowded by peers and diplomatists, some of them showing, by their appearance in that conventional costume of short breeches and stockings and buckles which survives, despite all Reform Bills, as one of the institutions of England, that they were fresh from the atmosphere which surrounds Royalty. He did his spiriting manfully and even grandly, and certainly saved the debate from a further adjournment.

We hardly know why, but we would fain pass by that painful episode in which Mr. Horsman and Mr. Walter figured. It seemed as if the latter gentleman was driven by a last provocation to deliver himself of a grievance with which he has long travailed. One could not help thinking that he had many a day since been smarting under a conviction that sidelong attempts had been made to cause him to feel that his position in the House was equivocal, and was glad to have an opportunity for uttering an indignant protest against a state of things which is manifestly inconsistent with the broad principle on which our representative institutions are founded. If members of the House of Commons imagine that that assembly, constituted as it is, represents public opinion more aptly than the institution which a gentleman of the press by his own avowal—Mr. Disraeli—contumeliously denies to be an estate of the realm, they will probably some day come across teachings and experience which will convince them that they are mistaken. Before parting with this subject we cannot refrain from a word of eulogy on the tact and spirit with which Lord Palmerston staved off a discussion of very doubtful advantage, and put an end to a scene which was the very reverse of agreeable. He has reasserted his powers of leadership which he has to a great extent not exercised with any activity of late, for he shunted away the personal debate, and by the display of a little determination on a previous occasion he brought the palaver about the Reform Bill to a close.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord CLANRICARDE, deferring to the wishes of the Government, postponed his motion on Savoy.

The Sunday Trading Bill was passed through Committee pro formâ.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

Mr. S. HERBERT gave an explanation respecting the China expedition.

Mr. WALTER called attention to a letter he had received from Mr. Horsman, which he conceived affected his right to address the House. A discussion of a personal nature followed, in which Lord Palmerston and Mr. Disraeli took part.

The Exchequer Bills (£13,230,000) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Census (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, as was also the Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Bill.

THE WINE LICENSES BILL.

The House renewed the adjourned debate on the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Liddell, Mr. V. Scully, Mr. Humberstone, Mr. E. James, Mr. Hardy, and Mr. Buxton opposed, and Mr. Alderman Salomons, Mr. C. Villiers, Sir S. M. Peto, and Sir W. Miles, supported the bill, on the understanding that amendments might be made in Committee.

Mr. GLADSTONE said that he was not unprepared to discuss and consider any modification of the details of the bill to which reference had been made. The real question of principle was whether it was intended to stand rigidly by the present system of licensing; and the object of the bill was to permit the use of a wholesale beverage, and one not calculated to produce intemperance in the strict sense of the term.

After a few words from Mr. Newdegate, a division was taken, the numbers being—For the second reading, 267; against it, 193.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Duchy of Cornwall Limitation of Actions Bill and the Bankruptcy Law (Scotland) Bill were read a second time.

The Pawnbrokers Act Amendment Bill passed through Committee.

REVISION OF THE LITURGY.

Lord EBURY moved an address to the Crown, praying for the appointment of a commission to prepare such alterations and amendments in the Canons and Book of Common Prayer as to them may appear desirable.

An interesting discussion took place, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Lyttelton, the Bishop of Oxford, Earl Stanhope, the Bishop of London, and Earl Granville, on various grounds, objecting to the motion, which was eventually withdrawn.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—TUESDAY.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.—Mr. BENTINCK, in moving for papers in connection with the Civil Service examinations, called attention to what he deemed a hardship suffered by a lad in whom he took an interest at the hands of the Civil Service Commission.—Mr. GLADSTONE generally defended the necessity of preserving the independence of the Commissioners, and urged that, in such a case as this, the House would do well not to exercise its right in calling for explanations.—Mr. M. MILNES and Lord R. CECIL supported the motion.—Sir G. C. LEWIS urged that if, as he thought was admitted, the system was one which ought to be maintained, it was necessary to make the answers to the examination papers confidential.—After some observations from Mr. G. W. Hope and Mr. Lowe, a division was taken, when the motion was negatived.

PAPER DUTY.

On the resumption of the adjourned debate on the third reading of the Paper Duty Repeal Bill,

Sir S. NORTHCOTE contended that the present state of the finances of the country rendered it undesirable to proceed further with the repeal of the excise duty on paper.

Mr. M. GIBSON defended the bill.

The discussion was continued by Mr. E. Ball, Mr. Puller, Sir M. Farquhar, and Lord Harry Vane.

Mr. Ellice and Mr. G. W. Hope signified their intention of voting against the third reading.

Mr. GLADSTONE elaborately reviewed the various objections which had been advanced, and answered them with minute detail.

Mr. T. BARING protested against the parting with an amount of revenue which might be, and he believed was now, wanted for the purposes of the country.

Mr. DISRAELI pointed out that the excess in the estimates over the original calculation, and the probable addition of other expenses, as for instance for fortifications, would not only absorb the surplus of revenue for which credit was taken in the Budget, but the demands would exceed the sum now given away by the remission of this tax.

On a division the numbers were—For the third reading, 219; against it, 209. The result was received with great cheering and counter-cheering.

Mr. Stewart stated that Mr. Ingram, the member for Boston, had gone into the lobby and refused to vote; and, as Mr. Ingram admitted that he had done so, having gone into the lobby by mistake, the Speaker ordered his vote to be added to the number for the amendment, which then stood 210.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE PIERS AND HARBOURS BILL.—The adjourned debate on the second reading of this bill was resumed.—Mr. LINDSAY opposed the bill on the ground that it conferred powers upon the Board of Admiralty which could not be satisfactorily discharged, and moved that it be read a second time that day six months.—After a short discussion the House divided, when the second reading was affirmed by a majority of 99 to 80.

BLEACHING AND DYEING WORKS.

On the order of the day for going into Committee on the Bleaching and Dyeing Works Bill,

Mr. BAZLEY moved that the bill be referred to a Select Committee. He believed that a mutual understanding could be arrived at between masters and operatives without the interference of Parliament.

Lord ASHLEY said the House already possessed sufficient information upon the subject, and it would be a waste of time to refer the bill to a Select Committee.

Colonel PATTEN opposed the amendment because he believed that the reopening of the inquiry would inevitably shelve the bill for the present Session.

Lord J. MANNERS thought the question was ripe for settlement, and that it would be inexpedient to delay legislation.

Sir J. GRAHAM supported the amendment, and stated that in so doing he had no desire to shelve the bill; but he thought that before any legislation took place some satisfactory settlement ought to be arrived at with regard to the details of a measure which affected most materially the operations of an important branch of national industry.

Mr. HENLEY said he would support the amendment provided that the inquiry of the Select Committee was confined to a settlement of the provisions of the bill.

After some further discussion,

Sir G. LEWIS recommended that the bill should be referred to a Select Committee, upon the understanding that their inquiry should not be unnecessarily protracted.

Sir H. CAIRNS supported the amendment, which, upon a division, was rejected by a majority of 184 to 147.

The House then went into Committee, and the first clause was under discussion when the House resumed.

The other business was then disposed of.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

PAPER REPEAL DUTY BILL.

This bill was brought up from the House of Commons, and read a first time.

Lord MONTEAGLE gave notice of his intention, on the motion for the second reading of the bill, to move that it be read a second time that day six months.

The Earl of WICKLOW hoped that the Government would afford ample time for the consideration of the measure before they asked for its second reading. He should be sorry to see that House deviating from the usual practice by rejecting bills of that character coming up from the other House. If, however, the Government were determined to persevere in hurrying on the second reading, he thought it would be the bounden duty of their Lordships, under the exceptional circumstances of the case, to reject the measure.

At a subsequent part of the evening, on the second reading of the Customs Bill,

The Earl of DERBY said the reason why the party with whom he was connected did not offer a substantial opposition to the Customs Bill was because they felt that the overthrow of that measure would upset the arrangements entered into by commercial men upon the faith that it would be accepted by Parliament. They considered the treaty entered into with France a most improvident act on the part of the Government; and the proceedings taken by the French Government since they were armed with the power which the treaty gave them showed that they were not inclined to exercise it without mercy. In respect, however, to the Paper Duty Repeal Bill, his party could fairly meet the question without interfering with the financial affairs of the Government. His noble friend had given notice of an amendment for the rejection of the bill. He would only say, that no exertion on his part would be wanted to save the Government upwards of £1,500,000 of revenue ("Hear" and laughter).

The Public Improvements Bill and the Petition of Right Bill were severally read a second time.

A series of bills for the consolidation of the criminal law passed through Committee.

The Exchequer Bills Bill (£13,230,000) and the Customs Bill were read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE REFORM BILLS.—Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply to Mr. Baxter and Mr. Scully, said it would be inconvenient to postpone the Committee upon the English Reform Bill until after the Scotch and Irish bills had been read a second time, because the effect of such a postponement would be to reopen the whole question of the franchise. With regard to postponing the latter measure until next year, either Lord Palmerston or he would state the course which the Government contemplated pursuing.

THE LATE ABSTRACTION OF EXAMINATION PAPERS.—Mr. S. HERBERT, in answer to Major Sibthorp, said that the War Office had been in communication with the police authorities on the subject of the late abstraction of examination papers, and were not without hope of detecting the offenders.

THE NATIONAL DEFENCES.—Mr. S. HERBERT, in reply to Mr. Palk, said that the report of the Commission on the National Defences would be ready in a few days, and, until it was produced, he should not ask a vote from the House for those defences.

THE POOR LAW BOARD.—Mr. C. VILLIERS, in answer to Sir M. Peto, said that the Government intended to propose the renewal of the Act constituting the Poor Law Board, but not to create any fresh powers relating to the removal of nuisances.

WINE LICENSES TO REFRESHMENT HOUSES.

In Committee of Ways and Means,

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the new scale of duties to be charged upon licenses to refreshment-houses, and upon licenses to sell foreign and British wines therein.

Mr. AYRTON denounced the proposed system of licensing, and complained that the Committee was left without any information as to what the term "refreshment-houses" was to mean.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the bill would define what those houses were to be, and by agreeing to the resolution no one would be pledged to any particular description of house. The right hon. gentleman, in reply to Lord J. Manners, said that if Ireland and Scotland were included the new licensing system would, he believed, yield to the revenue from £60,000 to £70,000 per annum, the larger proportion of which would accrue from wine licenses.

A discussion then arose with regard to the description of houses which the term "refreshment-houses" was to include, and also as to the power of interference on the part of the police which would be given under this new licensing system.

The Committee then divided upon the first portion of the resolution, charging 10s. 6d. for a license to keep a refreshment-house where the rent is under £20 a year, which was agreed to by 173 to 108.

On the next item in the resolution, imposing a duty of £1 1s. upon refreshment-houses where the rental was upwards of £20,

Mr. AYRTON moved to substitute 10s. 6d., in order to create one uniform rate of duty,

After some discussion the amendment was rejected by a majority of 159 to 88, and the original proposition was agreed to.

The remainder of the resolutions were agreed to without opposition.

The House then went into Committee upon the bill, and the remainder of the night was occupied by a consideration of its clauses.

The marriage of Mr. Adeane and Lady Elizabeth Yorke is fixed to take place early in June, at Wimpole Hall, Cambridgeshire.

The Great Ship Company notify that they intend dispatching the Great Eastern, from Southampton, for New York, on the 9th of June. Only three hundred first-class passengers will be taken; the charge for a return ticket is £40.

The Woolwich factories are engaged night and day in the production of Armstrong cannon, of all sizes, from 6 to 100 pounders. It is anticipated that 1200 of these terrible weapons, chiefly of the larger description, will be turned out this year.

A dinner will take place on Saturday, the 16th of June next, to commemorate the two hundredth anniversary of the formation of the Grenadier Guards, at which his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, as Colonel of the regiment, will preside.

A dramatic performance will be given on Tuesday next at the Sadler's Wells Theatre, the profits of which will be devoted to the erection of a simple monument in Highgate Cemetery, where the mortal remains of Mrs. Warner now repose.

"DELTA RIG."—A new kind of rig for ships has been invented by Mr. J. T. Dodge, which, from its resemblance in shape to the Greek letter Delta, is called the "Delta Rig." Its intention is to modify and economise the present system of rigging and working vessels by the introduction of simple, yet efficacious, means, inasmuch as it is alleged to embrace the following advantages:—1st, a saving of from 35 to 40 per cent in the outfit; 2nd, sailing nearer the wind and spreading more available canvas; 3rd, possessing the advantage of "shortening sail" from the deck, thus rendering "carrying-on" practicable even in squally weather, and hence the probability of the performance of safer and quicker passages.

ALUMINIUM.—M. Fabian states that he has employed a gold-beater upon this metal, and has found its ductility to be near to that of gold and silver, the thin plates resembling the latter in colour, but being less brilliant. M. Wöhler, in his "Annalen," details his experiments on the combustion of the wire and thin plates of aluminium (which produces a dazzling light), and the oxydising action of boiling water upon aluminium. He considers the properties of aluminium to be subordinate to its physical state, and thus explains the contradictory assertions made respecting it.

ŒRSTED'S PIEZOMETER, an instrument for measuring the compressibility of gases, has been made by Mr. Ladd, of 31, Chancery-lane, and was exhibited by him at the Royal Institution last Friday.

MUSIC.

The performance of "Don Giovanni" at Her MAJESTY'S THEATRE, on Saturday last, presented two very important novities: the appearance of Signor Everardi in the character of the base and of Mdme. Borghi-Mamo in Zerlina. Everardi supplied a desideratum which has been felt ever since the days of Tamburini—an adequate representation of the most arduous character of an opera stage. Since Tamburini every performer who has essayed the character of the brilliant nob in Don Giovanni libertine has, more or less, made a failure. Those who have been able to act the part have been unable to sing the music, and vice versâ. Everardi presents both. He is young, handsome, and distingué in aspect and manner, and is able to assume with equal felicity the dignity of the high-born Spanish gentleman, the ease and gaiety of the man of pleasure, and the reckless daring of the desperate reprobate. With all this he is a singer of the highest class; he has a rich and mellow baritone voice, made for Mozart's superb music, which he sings in the purest style and with perfect fidelity to the author's text. We need scarcely add that his success was complete. Equally successful was the charming personation of Zerlina by Borghi-Mamo. She painted to the life the giddy little peasant, fluttering her heart with an emotion of simplicity and innocence that the audience are as ready to forgive her as her lover-spouse, she lives herself on his money, and pours out her contribution in the irresistible melody,

Batti, batti, O bel Masetto,
La tua povera Zerlina!

The public are well acquainted with Titiens's fine performance of Donna Anna, equally admirable as a grand and sustained piece of acting, and a superb display of vocal power. Mdlle. Vanzi, a young partner of merit, sustained the difficult part of Donna Elvira with considerable power, both dramatic and vocal. The insipid part of Ottavio gave Giuglini little opportunity to show his talents to advantage, but afforded scope for some fine vocalisation. And Violetti's Leporello—though not marked with the genius of Lablache or Tamburini—was an intelligent performance, humorous as a whole, was well put upon the stage, the scenery, costumes, and decorations being appropriate and in good taste as a whole, and every scene, which, to use the words of a morning contemporary, with whom we entirely agree, "is always spoiled in this country by a vulgar and tasteless display of dancing and pantomime, was left to the troop of linkboys, with showers of red and blue fire, worthy only of the conclusion of a Boxing-night burlesque.

At the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, on Tuesday, there was another novelty of remarkable interest—the appearance of Mdme. Miolan-Carvalho in the character of Rosina, in the first act of "Il Barbiere." The lady, hitherto known to the English public only by her charming and intelligent performance of Dorothea, was decidedly more successful as the heroine of Rossini's most gay and brilliant comic opera. She was the very best ideal of the youthful Spanish maiden, and her acting called out all her powers, which are of a most captivating character. Her singing was the very perfection of the florid style, and as it would be reminded our readers of Mdme. Persiani or any other singer we have ever heard. To Persiani's inexhaustible richness of voice she joined her finish and brilliancy of execution. We must add, however, that, while our ears were charmed with these vocal efforts, they did not always satisfy our judgment. She frequently sacrificed the fortune to such a degree of ornamentation as many of her own ideas for those of Rossini, that it was no longer possible to recognise the musician. This may be very well up to the meagre outlines of an inferior composer; but the text of Rossini, like that of Mozart, should be preserved intact. Still, Mdme. Miolan-Carvalho's able comic opera has seldom been better performed. In the character of Count Almaviva Mario has no rival, either as an actor or a singer; and Graziani, in the lively gesture of his fun-loving barber, was the imagined by Beaumarchais; it is pure comedy, without the slightest taint of exaggeration or vulgarity. Zelger's Bartolo was one of the imitations of Lablache that, when the purely doctor came upon the stage, his appearance was saluted by hearty, unaffected laughter. Lablache's English interjections; and, though the whole performance was clever, yet there was something teasing in being incessantly reminded of the great blank that is left in the part. Ronconi's Don Basilio was a very able performance, and the very small part of Berta deserved mention from the spirit with which it was acted and sung by Mdlle. Cotti.

The Lyceum has been opened by Mr. Laurent, for the performances of French opera, and Auber's well-known opera "Le Domino Noir" has been performed on Wednesday evening. The prima donna, Mdme. Faivre, was already known to the public, having been the principal member of a French company who gave similar performances here last season. This lady is a lively actress and an excellent singer of the French school; and the audience, on the first night of the season, appeared to be in a most favourable humour to find fault with the performance, which is stronger than that of last year. Auber's opera—last night's performance by the way—is one of the most effectively performed, and received with immense applause by an audience, a large portion of whom seemed to be compatriotes of the performers.

Of the MENDELSSOHN FESTIVAL at the Crystal Palace, on Friday last week, we have in another place given a general account, with a view of its most picturesque feature, the great torch light procession in the evening. At present we have only a few words to say about the musical feature of the festival—the monster performances of Mendelssohn's last and greatest work, the oratorio of "Elijah." For this performance there was the enormous band of 3000 voices and instruments—a strength without precedent in the annals of music, with the exception of the Handel Festivals, and in a smaller place, when the number of performers was nearly equal. The choral voices, too, were the same. Since the Handel Festivals they have been frequently brought together and kept in training with a view to this performance. To make such a host move together with precision in obedience to the conductor's baton was a task which probably no other conductor but Mr. Costa could have achieved; but he did achieve it in a manner truly astonishing. The execution of Mendelssohn's grand masses of harmony derived additional grandeur from the thoroughness of discipline employed to secure it. The principal solo-singers were Mr. Sims Reeves, Mdlle. Parepa, Mdme. Rudersdorff, Miss Palmer, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Weiss. To make themselves distinctly audible in so vast a space was a most arduous task. It was wonderfully accomplished by Mr. Reeves and Mdlle. Parepa, whose clear, brilliant voices rang through the whole building; and even the voices of lower pitch were, on the whole, satisfactorily heard during the performance as a whole, it was a sublime display of the powers of harmony.

The PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY has begun this, its forty-eighth season, with unusual spirit and vigour. A foreign poet is in some account of the first concert; the second, on Monday evening last, was, if possible, even more brilliant and successful. The selection of the selection will be sufficiently apparent from the programme:—

PART I.

Sinfonia No. 7	...	Haydn.
Recit. "Ecco il Cimbalo," and Aria, "Agitato un pò," Mr. Sautley ("Voce di Paco")	...	Mozart.
Concerto, Violoncello, Mr. Ernst Lidwell	...	Romberg.
Recit. "Ove abbandonerò infelice," Mdlle. Parepa ("Olimpia")	...	Weber.
Overture, "Ruy Blas"	...	Mendelssohn.

Sinfonia Pastorale	...	Beethoven.
Recit. and Aria, "Le Nozze de Cortolani"	...	Mozart.
Scena, "Ombra adorata," Mr. Ernst Lidwell	...	Ernst Lidwell.
Duetto, "Quel Sguardo," Mdlle. Parepa and Mr. Sautley ("Lucrezia Borgia")	...	Donizetti.
Overture, "Fra Diavolo"	...	Auber.

Conductor—Professor Sterndale Bennett, Mus. D.

Haydn's symphony—one of the twelve distinguished by the epithet "grand," which he wrote for the concert-room during his visit to London, and first performed at the once-celebrated "Solomon's Concerts"—is a chef d'œuvre of the illustrious musician. Haydn's symphonies have been thrown into the shade by the bolder, loftier, vaster works of Beethoven; but they are full of imperishable beauties, and still give delight to every listener possessed of taste and feeling. It was heartily enjoyed by the audience; and its delightful impression on the ear and the mind was not obliterated even by Beethoven's inimitable piece of descriptive music, the Sinfonia Pastorale.

Herr Lubeck—who appeared for the second time before an English audience, his first appearance having been at a matinée of the Musical Union—showed himself to be a pianist of the very highest class. His performance of Mendelssohn's concerto united every variety of excellence—colossal strength and boundless execution, joined to the softer beauties of grace, refinement, and expression. In short, we have never heard finer playing; and the audience, to judge from the vehemence of their applause, seemed to be of a similar opinion.

At this, as at the previous concert, the vocal music was even of a higher order than usual. Miss Parepa's performance of the great air from "Oberon" was a superb display of vocal power; and she was equally successful, though in lighter style, in the fine air from "The Siege of Corinth." Mr. Sautley's scena from the "Nozze di Figaro" was delightfully sung; and Ernst Lidwell's singing made us wish (which we have often done before) that some theatrical manager would revive that peculiar but most interesting and pathetic opera.

THE THEATRES, &c.

HAYMARKET.—A new drama, in three acts, was produced on Wednesday, entitled by Mr. Buckstone, under the title of "Family Secret." It is not likely to gain for the author all the popularity that followed his comedy of "Extremes," but it is certainly a clever production. It possesses the appearance of having been written to needs much compression and polishing. Too frequently the dialogue is crude and pretentious. But the characters are numerous and varied. Mrs. Wilkins has an excellent character as a nervous lady, who makes the most of the part. Other minor segments her importance by it without diminishing her size or health. Mr. Buckstone, too, rejoices in the part of her son, a young man who is no longer willing to be considered a boy, and who wonders why the heroine Ina (Miss Sedgwick) cannot see in him an eligible husband. Mr. Howe (a newcomer, for Lord Dundreary is not Mr. Farren). We make his Lordship's acquaintance first at the cafe de Londres, where he is entertaining a friend, Captain Childe Harold, in order to escape marriage with a young lady recommended by his father, but whom he has never seen. By good luck his young friend has left his name with the waiter at the cafe, but his Lordship has been induced to give a pledge to a Lady Frances Vere (Mrs. Fox), who is the wife of a friend of his father, that a contract with Ina can honourably be fulfilled. This is, of course, effected. The lady is the daughter of his friend's eldest son, whose grandfather—the family have sympathies we are sorry to say—has been estranged, unknown to his Lordship, because the daughter married between the parties. The heroine is of the generous order, and burns the fatal documents. Lord Avonmore feels, however, he cannot take the same steps of generosity with the lady who has released by Lady Frances, who pairs off with a former lover, Colonel Vilas O'Donnell (Mr. Howe). The success of this drama greatly depends on its comic scenes, which have little to do with the real plot, but which are yet artfully introduced. Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Wilkins are in these most effective. The heroine scarcely suits Miss Sedgwick's style; nevertheless, she acted it with great spirit, and frequently commanded great applause. The curtain fell to a decided success.

MR. AND MRS. HOWARD PAUL announce that their popular entertainment will never again be given in London after the present month.

THE FARM.

The gilt cocks and foxes which have so long done duty as weather-vanes indicators have at last ceased to point due east, and the rain which accompanied the change of wind has been hailed by many farmers as heart-ease more. In the northern part of England the unwonted fall of rain has been accompanied by a considerable change. Many of them get into ravines in search of the few blades of grass near the water and die there, owing to absolute weakness when their carcases become dry. The Scotch cattle, on the other hand, are thrifty housewife whose sympathies were so touched by the famine in Ireland that she sent a cargo of pigs and fowls, in a steamer with a cart, in hopes that the neat train would bring some hay up-country that was not required for cattle. Such benevolence has made a most salutary mess of them in the boiler.

The duties and privileges of landlord, tenant, and labourer form the subject of a very valuable lecture lately delivered by Mr. John Beasley, of Chapel Brampton, Northamptonshire, to the members of the Farmers' Club assembled at the Swan Hotel, Lutterworth. It has published in a pamphlet form. As a farmer, land-valuer, landagent, and land-surveyor, Mr. Beasley has had ample experience in the very front rank, and the lecture is a brief digest of nearly forty years' experience, and is, therefore, a pleasant as well as practical. He points out with no small force how difficult it is for an agent to deal with those who have not acquired some knowledge of the law. Quite as many tenants as agents do not understand even the rudiments of the grammar of farming, and he suggests that while the eldest son who takes to the estate should be educated just as carefully in them as the younger brothers are in the rudiments of Latin and Greek. Farmers, he regards leases in themselves, he does not coincide in the usual belief that they are the high road to prosperity, and considers that the privileges are not always worth the money that is paid for them. Leases, as a general thing, have a tendency to do away with small farmers altogether by consolidating their farms, and rendering it unhesitatingly declares to be a great mistake. His impression is that the profession of land-agent is not properly understood, nowhere for seven years, and so on, till either party becomes tired. The subject of manure valuing between the new and the out-going tenants receives a large share of attention, and is of more value than the view which he takes of this much-vexed question. The key of the lock-up game laws bounded by the following figures, we sought the counsel of Mr. Baker, of Dishley, as lovers came for each, entirely upon the ground that it is not worth while to kill a hare, too many young farmers get up their farming rudiments receives a well-timed rebuke. The latter would do wisely to adopt his motto, the neglect of which is the cause of many a failure in life—"Be wit—" Strict attention to details."

The Mark Lane Express, in pointing attention to the growing exclusiveness of the council of the Royal Agricultural Society. Out of the twenty-four members of council, only the Duke of Richmond's late farmers, three implement-makers, an engineer, a seedsman, a chemist, and a proprietary, while the lords and commoners' interest is represented by fifty-five. The spirit of cliquerie has been rather strong on some recent occasions, and three or four tenantfarmers of the Duke of Richmond, Lord Leconfield, and Lord Egremont have just been passed over to make way for a Duke, an Earl, and a Right Honourable. Among the names of those who have left Lord Ernest Bruce sought so especially to guard when he was the president of the Smithfield Club, and whose interests were dear to Mr. Pusey, Mr. Tite, and it seems pretty well settled that the 1862 meeting is to be held in London.

Mr. Stafford has a draught sale of shorthorns at Burghley on Thursday next, and Mr. Wetherell, sen., announces one at Bushey Grove Farm for July 5. Among the Bushey lots are two yearlings and eight bull calves by Great Mogul, who was twice first and twice second in the stock at the Royal and Yorkshire meetings in 1857-58, as well as Baron of Bushey by Booth's Bridesman and Folkestone by Windsor. The rest of the sale consists of dairy heifers, polled Scots, and Southdowns. We have a large gathering of Scots at Perth, and a good lot of shorthorns shipped by Mr. M'Dougal, of Australia, with the exception of a 2000 guinea bull—Booth's Conscript—which was pronounced at starting to be the best condition to stand so long a voyage. Shorthorns generally are improving in size and quality, which is now shipped, it is marvellous how comparatively seldom such casualties occur.

Mr. Macready writes to the Times to contradict a report which has been circulated in reference to one of his daughters appearing on the stage. "there never having been the shadow of foundation for the report of her intention to quit the sphere of private life to which she has been educated."

A short return of what the Aldershott Barracks have cost was moved for yesterday morning. It is as follows:—Purchase of land, £144,666; permanent and hut barracks, £1,139,503; bringing water to the barracks, £10,774; total, £1,294,943.

A NEW GREEK CHURCH FOR MANCHESTER.—On Tuesday morning the foundation-stone of a new Greek church was laid by the Rev. B. Morse, Chaplain to the Greek community in Manchester. OPENING OF THE CENTRAL LINE TO SHERBORNE.—Another road is in the direction of railway communication between London and Exeter, through the centre of Dorsetshire, by the line of the Dorset Central Railway. This line, which is to connect the Somerset and Dorset at Sherborne with the Salisbury and Yeovil line, which was opened for traffic in July last year, was opened for the public conveyance of passengers on the entire course to Exeter.

CONSECRATION OF SPIRE CHURCH, BERKS.—The old parish church of Speen has recently been completely restored and rendered very elegant and commodious, through the liberality of the Rev. Sir Henry W. Wigoche, who has, it is stated, spent about £3000 in the work. On Thursday week the church was opened for divine service, when it was consecrated by the Bishop of Oxford, assisted by the Bishop of Salisbury.

THE WINDSOR AND ETON ROYAL CONSTITUTIONAL LIBRARY was laid at St. Helen's, Lancashire, on Thursday week, by the Rev. Thomas Beard, Provincial Grand Master of the Order of Freemasons in that district. The funds have been raised by private subscription.

A murder has just been committed in the neighbourhood of Ripon, the victim being a child. From the immediate cause a wrangle appears to have arisen, after maltreating the child in a most brutal manner, the murderer threw it into a pond from the personal violence which was first inflicted upon him, or from suffocation from the subsequent burial, does not appear. The man is now in custody, and a verdict of "Wilful murder" has been returned against him by the coroner's jury.

WALTHAM ABBEY.—The reopening of the venerable church of Waltham Holy Cross, Essex, which for several months had been closed for the purpose of undergoing the needful services of restoration, took place. The whole interior of the nave, built by King Harold, has undergone a thorough repair, and the fine old roof has been restored to its pristine state carefully preserved by the architect, Mr. W. Burges. There are several new stained glass windows, the gift of Queen Victoria, the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, the late National Gallery, and other friends of the personal residence of the late Archbishop Howley, who was for many years rector of Waltham. The munificent gift of £1000 by Miss Burdett Coutts, to meet the necessary outlay, is mentioned with deserved gratitude by the rector.

EXTRAORDINARY IRISH EXODUS FROM LIVERPOOL.—The official returns of the emigration from Liverpool to the present colonies continue especially as regards the great exodus of the Irish population. In the previous month 30 cabin and 659 steerage passengers sailed for Australia, and 1,000 for New Zealand. The emigration is limited to two ships "under the Act," with 31 cabin and 815 steerage passengers (743 adult)—363 English, 79 Scotch, 393 Irish, and 60 of other countries.

SUBIACO, IN THE PAPAL STATES.

FIFTY miles to the west of Rome, among the mass of mountains in which the River Anio hollows out the deep ravine that formerly served as a frontier, the traveller, in following the course of the river, arrives at a sort of wide basin opening out between two enormous piles of rocks, from which a fresh and transparent stream rushes from fall to fall to a place called Subiaco, of which we here give an Illustration. This grand and picturesque site attracted the attention of the Roman Emperor Nero, who had the waters controlled by dykes, and constructed below those artificial lakes, bathe, and a villa called from its position Sublaqueum, of which some remains still exist. The cruel Emperor resided here occasionally. But a more agreeable memoir is attached to the neighbourhood and name of Subiaco, rendered celebrated by the circumstance that, four centuries later, a young noble, desirous of avoiding the pleasures and dangers of contact with the world, sought by solitude and suffering to bring his soul into more immediate communion with the Almighty. The baptismal name of this youthful scion of the Ancicus family was Benedict; and it was he who heralded the foundation of the Order of Benedictine Monks, an order which has produced so many learned and pious men during a series of ages. St. Benedict, for he was afterwards canonised, attracted to his solitary mountain retreat a number of youths disposed to follow his example of virtue and piety; but, owing to jealous persecution, he remained in this hermitage only a few years, subsequently retiring to Mont Cassin, where he terminated his career in the full exercise of his mission, dying while engaged in prayer. St. Benedict was born A.D. 480, and died A.D. 543.

The modern town of Subiaco, near Teverone, on the frontier of Naples, is fifteen miles E.S.E. of Tivoli, and contains three thousand inhabitants. It possesses a fine church, dedicated to St. Andrew, a Papal palace, and a triumphal arch, erected in honour of Pope Pius VI. Its principal trade consists in ironfounding and the manufacture of paper. This occasional residence of the Popes deserves also the respect of lovers of literature as having been the first place in Italy in which a printing-press was set up.

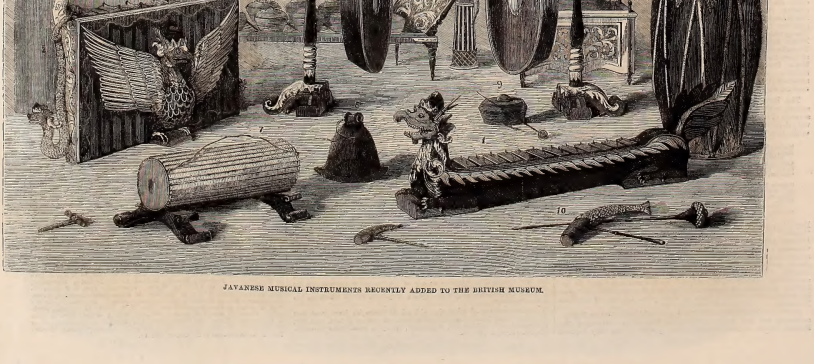
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FROM JAVA.



A NUMBER of musical instruments, collected in the Island of Java by the late Sir Thomas Stamford Raffles, have recently been presented by his widow to the British Museum. The collection is placed in the British and Medieval Room. Most of these instrument resemble the staccato or harmonium. The sound is produced by the stroke of a hammer. The gúmbang-gínges (No. 1), of which there are several in each band, have metal plates laid across different-shaped imaginary animals, the bodies or trunks of these being hollow. In the géender (No. 2) the metal plates are thin, of a different form, and suspended by strings. The gongs (No. 3) are about three feet in diameter, and are struck by a mallet covered with cloth or elastic gum: they sustain the harmonious sound in a very perfect manner, and are probably the most powerful and musical of all monotonous instruments; the two gongs differ from each other by one note. The bónang, or krómo (No. 4), are a sort of bells placed on a frame, suspended by cords, and contain a regular diatonic scale, and nearly two octaves. These, however, are never played singly, but harmonise with the instruments on which the air is played. The kénong (No. 5) is also of metal, and is suspended by tightened cords to favour the vibration. The drum (No. 6) is struck with the open hand and fingers only. No. 7, a drum; No. 8, a bell; No. 9, the general shape of the sort of bells suspended on frames, &c.; No. 10, mallets, or hammers, used for striking the various instruments. A gámelan, set, or band, of these instruments costs from 1000 to 1600 dollars (£250 to £400). The principal manufacture of these instruments is at Grésik. The gongs, in particular, furnish a valuable article of export. Every native chief in authority has one or more of these gámelans, and there are more or less perfect sets in all the populous towns of the Eastern province.

NELSON COLLEGE, NEW ZEALAND.

THE first stone of a new educational institution has been recently laid in Nelson, New Zealand, by the Governor, Colonel Thomas Gore Browne, C.B., with much state, in the presence of the heads of departments of the general and provincial Governments, members of the Executive and Provincial Councils, the Bishop of Nelson and clergy of various denominations, and a large concourse of the inhabitants of Nelson. The following particulars are collected from the address of Dr. Greenwood to the Governor, and the exp anation of Mr. Beatson, the architect, as reported in the Nelson Examiner.

The design to establish a college in this province is no new one, but a coeval with the proposal to form the settlement itself, and was put prominently forward as one of the great objects which its founders proposed to accomplish. It was not, however, until the affairs of the settlement were transferred from the New Zealand Company to the British Government that there was any hope of carrying out the original design. Towards the close of 1850 the claim of the settlers to a portion of the money arising from the sale of land in the colony for educational purposes was, after careful investigation, fully recognised, and the money paid to the trustees of the college, who in the course of a few months purchased a house for the residence of the principal, built the present temporary schoolroom, and opened the school. By the end of the year the institution was placed on a more permanent footing by the appointment of the present council of governors, the deed prescribing their duties and laying down the principles of the college was drawn up, and the respectable office of visitor accepted by his Excellency the Governor of New Zealand.

The new building will stand on the slope of a hill, which has been excavated, and the earth thrown up into terraces, so as to form a level platform of nearly 200 feet square. This, with the foundations, which are of rough stone, brought up to the present level from the solid ground beneath, has been done at the cost of nearly £1000, and the contracts for the whole building, exclusive of the foundation, will amount to about £7100. In compliance with the wish of the governors to have a building which should remind them of dear old England, the architect, has selected for its design the mixed style commonly known as Elizabethan (of which Woolaton Hall, Notts, and Longleat Hall, Wilts, are celebrated specimens) as peculiarly adapted for sound construction in wood, of which material, in consequence of the frequent occurrence in this province of earthquakes, the whole of the structure, except the chimneys and roof coverings, is to be composed. The principal front of the building will face the north-east, and will extend 140 feet in length; the north-west front will be eighty-two feet in length. The buildings will form two sides of an inner court or quadrangle, on the south-west side of which will be ranged the domestic offices, and this open space will allow for any required future extension of the buildings, both on the fourth (south-east) side and in the centre. The college will comprise spacious classrooms for more than 100 students, and dining-room, head master's room, and office of the secretary, accommodation for two resident masters, and sleeping accommodation for thirty-four students, the upper story of the frontage of one wing being appropriated to the use of the matron, steward, and female servants of the establishment. From the centre of the front elevation a tower will project, which, rising above the main roof, will distinguish and give character and projection to the wings.

At the conclusion of the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone the company adjourned to the Freemasons' Hall, where a déjeuner had been provided, and where the healths of the Queen, the Governor, the Bishop, Captain Cracroft, Colonel Mould and the guests of the day, the College Governors and the Master of the College, were drunk with enthusiasm; the festivities of the day being concluded by a ball in honour of his Excellency, which also took place in the Freemasons' Hall.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.

THE choir of Lichfield Cathedral is now undergoing considerable alteration under the superintendence of Mr. Scott. The masonry is throughout being substantially repaired, and new fittings, including a bishop's throne, are to take the place of the late unsightly work. It is intended also to introduce polychromatic decoration to some extent. This department has been intrusted to Mr. Octavius Hudson. The repairs of the masonry are being done by the staff of men connected with the cathedral, under the foremanship of Mr. Hamlet; the woodwork is contracted for by Evans, of Elsaton; the stone carving is being done by Farmer, of London; and the metal screens and gas-fittings by Skidmore, of Coventry; the whole being under the supervision of Mr. G. Clark, the zealous clerk of the works. Our View embraces the chief part of the new oakwork in the choir and screens behind, with the handsome screen dividing it from the nave, also sundry restorations now in progress in other parts of the fabric. It is intended to restore the altar-table to its original position, and to re-erect the reredos which was taken down in the changes made some sixty years ago. This will permit the use of the Lady Choir for the early service appointed by the statutes to be daily said there. It ought to be generally known that the statutes distinctly provide for a service for the convenience of artisans, servants, labouring people, and those engaged in trade ("non modo servi, sed etiam minorum gentium artifices et mercatores," are the words of the statute) at an early hour, about seven in the morning, to be said, and not sung, in the lady choir; but, that part of the edifice having been injudiciously thrown in to form part of the great choir, the important and truly English service ordered so considerately to be there performed has been almost necessarily omitted since the change. The communion-table and reredos will in future stand at the second pillar westward from the Lady Chapel; and near to it, some yards farther on the south side, the bishop's throne, between which and the gates opening into the choir will be, on each side, eighteen stalls, besides the sub-stalls. The additions which Bishop Langton made to the church about 1296 were very considerable. He may almost be said to have rebuilt it as it now is for the most part, which will account for certain variations in the detail of the inner arches, &c. The stone vaulting dates from the time of Bishop Blythe, who lived a little before the Reformation. It is now in course of being rescued from the whitewash which has so long hidden much of its beauty. In clearing it traces of the old colouring and gilding have been distinctly revealed, and these features will now be, partially at least, restored.

INDIAN DWARF.

MOHAMMED BAUX was born at Benares in the year 1839. His parents and his brothers and sisters are all rather above the middle height, and he himself was not considered a small child; but it was soon discovered that he did not increase in size as other children did, although his mental qualities were rather above than below the ordinary standard. His father was employed as a sepoy in the East India Company's service, and continued so till he was discharged as being unfit for duty. For many years, it seems, Mohammed was the pet of the districts about Calcutta, often being invited by the most distinguished native and British residents to their houses, where he was always a welcome visitor from his amiable conduct and pleading manners. At the commencement of the outbreak in India it appears that, either from love of adventure or from fear of his being secured for a novelty, his brother took him up the country, visiting the stations at Mirajpore, Chundergar, Allahabad, Futtehpore, Gonderbars, Patna, Dinapore, Delhi, and Cawnpore. For some short time he was in the Lord Sahib's camp, but a sudden movement of the camp left him in the rear. It seems that at Cawnpore he witnessed the dreadful massacres that there took place of the ladies and children, and was only himself (to use his own words) saved "because he was a dwarf, and never did any harm, and could light nobody." He returned to Calcutta in the latter end of 1859, and, becoming intimate with a Mr. Francis, the gentleman under whose care he now is, determined to accompany him to England, arriving here by the Nile at the end of last March. Mohammed Baux is about thirty-seven inches high, with very easy, unembarrassed manners, is able to converse in English, and is remarkable for his gentlemanly deportment.

IMPROVEMENTS OF THE SERPENTINE.

PREVIOUS to the commencement of the works for the purification of the water of the Serpentine by means of filtration there existed at the head of the lake a dirty duck-pond of about a foot in depth, into which the Ranelagh sewer periodically discharged its contents. This now forms the site of the Italian garden, designed in connection with the intended filtering basins, and in this garden are being placed the fountains and other ornamental works sculptured by Mr. John Thomas, by whom many of the most beautiful of the carvings and statues of the Houses of Parliament were executed. We present our readers with a view of the large fountain now being erected in the centre of the water-front of the garden. The large basin is sixteen feet in diameter, and was intended to deliver two million gallons of purified water into the Serpentine during every twenty-four hours in addition to the quantity discharged by the jets. This basin is sculptured in Portland stone, and bears on its centre a group of Tritons affording support to a highly-sculptured marble tazza, from which it is intended there shall ascend a jet or sheaf of water of considerable magnitude and many varying forms. On each side of this fountain, and somewhat raised above it, are seated two female figures of colossal size, bearing urns, from which will be discharged copious streams of water into the basin below. These figures are differently and gracefully treated, as also are their adjuncts the two swans, intended to be principally seen from the interior of the garden. The level of the basin is approached by a flight of massive semicircular steps, the lower one of which is carved into leaves bending over the basin. The backs of the figures rest against highly-decorated pedestals, forming the termination of an ornamental balustrade enriched at intervals with very ornamental flower-vases of varied designs, all executed by Mr. Thomas in Portland stone. On the sides of the garden the enclosure is continued by similar pedestals and vases, but here the balustrades give place to open railings and gates of elegant design.

THE HON. ARTILLERY COMPANY OF LONDON
(VOLUNTEER RIFLE REGIMENT).

THIS company, of which the Prince Consort is Captain-General and Colonel, has existed for more than two centuries. It exercises by virtue of warrants under her Majesty's Royal sign manual, and is maintained by its permanent members without public aid. The officers hold the Queen's commission, and first pass through the successive non-commissioned grades. The regiment is armed with Enfield rifles, and has also an artillery division, with four field-pieces. The present strength of the corps is about six hundred. At its head-quarters in Finsbury are a drill-ground of seven acres, and a hall for winter drill, with conveniences, classes for fencing and broadsword; and it has a long-range at a little distance from town. The Sovereign or her apparent has usually been the Captain-General of this company. Prince George of Denmark (the husband of Queen Anne), George I. (who gave the company £500), George II., and George IV. (when Prince of Wales), held the command, as did William IV., succeeded by the Duke of Sussex, upon whose death the command was accepted by Prince Albert. On the occasion of Royal visits to the City the Artillery Company attend as a guard of honour to the Sovereign: as on Nov. 9, 1837, when Queen Victoria dined in Guildhall; and on Oct. 25, 1844, when her Majesty opened the Royal Exchange. Another mark of Royal favour, in addition to several others received, by this company, has just been bestowed upon it. The Gazette of yesterday week contained the following announcement:—"The Queen has been pleased to command that, as the 'Artillery Company of London' has always been known under the title of the 'Hon. Artillery Company of London,' that designation shall in future be officially borne by the regiment."

A troop of horse artillery is to be attached to this regiment, under the command of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, its Captain-General, and Lord Colville, its Lieutenant-Colonel. The ranks of this troop are being rapidly filled up. Its uniform is blue, edged with scarlet and silver, with brown leather belts and sable-coloured busbys. The chargers with which every member provides himself may vary in height from fifteen hands one inch to fifteen hands three inches. The command of this new troop, we are informed, has been awarded to Captain Jay, an energetic officer of this corps. For many years he has had the company of the rifle division of this regiment, even previous to the time of its being armed with the Enfield rifle. With the exception that each member will have to provide himself with a horse, the expenses will not far exceed those of the infantry. The income arising from property belonging to the Honourable Artillery Company is not less than £2000 per annum, which sum is always applied to the services of the regiment and, consequently, its permanency is as secure as its renown.

DESTRUCTION OF THE LIVERPOOL SAILORS' HOME BY FIRE, AND LOSS OF LIFE.

EARLY on the morning of Sunday week the upper portion of the Sailors' Home at Liverpool was found to be on fire. The fire police, a corps of men from her Majesty's ship Hastings, and a crowd of other persons were soon on the spot, but in spite of their efforts the building was soon gutted. The four bare walls are now alone standing. At the time the fire broke out there were in the building about one hundred boarders and seventeen officials, but only three lives were lost. A policeman fell from the top of a high ladder which broke under him, and, as he fell some fifty feet, was killed on the spot. One of the stewards in the establishment, while engaged with some other persons in getting the books out of the bank, was jammed under a mass of débris, the lower part of his body being fearfully crushed: he died in about an hour after his removal to the Southern Hospital. A third person has subsequently died from the severe burns which he received. The local Marine Board occupied offices in the building, which was considered to be almost fireproof, though the men's berths in the dormitories, where the fire is supposed to have originated, were made of pitch pine. The building cost £30,000; it was insured for £10,000, and the interior fittings for £1000. The books have been recovered, and the business of the Home is in the meantime being carried on in the Custom House arcade and in portions of the dock offices.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE settling on the Chester Cup has gone off remarkably well, owing to St. Albans having come into the betting so very recently and at so short a price. For the Derby The Wizard still holds his place pretty firmly at 3 to 1, while St. Albans is only two points behind him. Umpire, who is said to have an excessive dislike to getting into a van, is again very shaky, although his admirers would have taken 10 to 1. Buccaneer is said to be doing steady work at Woolcot's, and is quoted at about the same price as Thormanby, who has held his own very steadily all through the spring. Upperhand has some admirers at 100 to 1, who maintain that his Chester race was a mistake, and that he was rapidly catching his horses at the finish. It may be that he requires a longer distance and a course with fewer turns in it, or else he has utterly deceived Fobert, who did not hesitate to say that he believed he had a second Dutchman in him. Unless Underhand has sadly gone off, he ought to be able to try a Derby horse very highly, but the little bay's bad Chester Cup running shows that he is not an infallible barometer.

The Bath meeting will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday. St. Albans, Loiterer, The Gentle, Cape Flyaway, Seclusion, Lupellus, Man-at-Arms, and Buccaneer are amongst the Three-year-old Biennial horses; but neither the first nor the last named are likely to start; and Seclusion will probably give us the first specimen of her ability to get the Oaks distance. Sister to St. Albans (who will, no doubt, honour another venal borough by taking its name), Lava, Big Ben, and Shillelagh, a good-looking colt of Lord Strathmore's, are in the Two-year-old Biennial; and Little Lady, The Rover, Actæon, and Romsey are leading names in the T.Y.C. Kelston Stakes. The Somersetshire Stakes stands for Wednesday; and so do the Weston Stakes, which include Big Ben, Zodiac, and Walloon. Harpenden has a pleasant little meeting on Friday, and then comes "the great secret" of the year.

The Spring Meeting at Doncaster has been quite a failure, both in point of fields and attendance. Stockton beat his old opponent Ripon by a head for the Trial Stakes; and Little Lady, despite her 7lb. extra, won the Hopeful Stakes very cleverly. The time of the year at which the meeting is now held thinned the candidates for this race by at least two-thirds. Homeward Bound disappointed his backers in the Handicap, in which Desmond made his own running throughout. This son of Bandy suffered a twenty-length defeat from The Gentle this spring; and the long lead with which the other jockeys indulged him on Tuesday can only be accounted for by the fact that they believed he was simply making a pace for First Lord. Wednesday's racing introduced us to the first winner by Rifleman; and Little Lady, with 7lb. extra again, showed her gameness in a head-and-head finish for the Glasgow Plate. We should think that we have seen about the last of the Doncaster May meetings, and that they must return to the old March régime.

The United All England Eleven commence their campaign on Monday at Sheffield, where they are matched against eighteen of the Hallam Club, and two professionals; and on Thursday they confront sixteen of the Reigate Club with Caffyn, and another professional player. The United team Consists of V. E. Walker, Esq., Carpenter, Grundy, J. Lillywhite, Hearne, Mortlock, Griffith, Lockyer, Wells, Stubberfield, Sewell, jun., and Ellis. They have not yet finally settled who are to represent them on the 28th, but it is generally understood that the All England Eleven on that occasion will consist of J. Cæsar, A. Clarke, Dait, Tinley, Wilsher, A. H. Stephenson, Diver, Tarrant, Hayward, Jackson, and G. Parr. It is feared that Wisden will not be able to play this season. There will also be a match at Lord's, on Monday, between the Marylebone Club and Ground and the West Middlesex and London Union Rifles; and on Thursday the Household Brigade meet the Peripatetics.

AQUATICS.—The first match of the season of the ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB will take place on the 30th inst. with cutters of the second, third, and fourth classes for a series of valuable prizes. The second race will take place on the 14th of June for cutters of the first class, and also a match amongst amateurs; and on the 29th of June the schooner race is to be sailed. From the number of new yachts building first-rate sport is anticipated.

The entries for the first great regatta of the ROYAL LONDON YACHT CLUB closed on Wednesday night, and are as follows:—Third-class yachts, under 10 tons: Haidée, 8 tons, Mr. Thomas Bartlett owner; Clara, 7 tons, Mr. J. B. Burhey; Violet, 9 tons, Lore De Ros; Surprise, 8 tons, Mr. Thomas Carr. Extra-class, under 6 tons: Eugénie, 6 tons, Mr D. T. White; Blue Bell, 6 tons, Mr. J. W. Ridgway; Spray, 5 tons, Mr. George Haines; May Fly, 4 tons, Mr. William Roe. The race takes place on Tuesday next, the 15th inst., and there are three prizes in each class, both of which are open to any yacht club. The course is from Erith, round a boat moored off Coal House Point, and back to Greenwich; and the Prince of Wales General Steam Navigation Company's steamer will accompany the race, with the Hon. Artillery Company's band on board, leaving London-bridge at nine o'clock.

CRICKET.—COMMENCEMENT OF THE SEASON.—The MARYLEBONE CLUB celebrated their seventy-third anniversary, and fairly opened the cricket season for 1860, on Wednesday week, in the pavilion at Lord's. In the absence of the noble president, the Earl of Coventry, the president elect, Lord Skelmersdale, presided over a highly influential assembly of the patrons and supporters of the noble game. Prior to the dinner an important addition, both in rank and numbers, was made to the club, in the election of new members.

THE SURREY COUNTY CLUB celebrated the commencement of the season by holding their annual dinner yesterday week at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street. Mr. H. Marshall, president of the club, occupied the chair, the vice-chair being filled by Mr. H. Mortimer. This is the largest club in England, comprising 800 members, 125 new members being this year elected.

The programme issued by the executive of both these clubs for the season comprises some first-rate matches. The first match of the season by the Marlebone Club will be played on Monday next, the 14th inst., eleven of the M.C.C. and Ground contending against eleven of the West Middlesex and London University Rifles.

OXFORD: Gentlemen v. Players.—On Thursday week this match was commenced on the Magdalen Ground, Cowley Marsh, Oxford. The ground was remarkably well attended, the Prince of Wales (who has entered as a member of the Bullingdon Club) and a large party of fashionables honouring the match with their presence. The match was resumed on Friday, but ended in a draw. The following is the score up to the close of the play:—Gentlemen, first innings, 126; second innings, 105. Players, first innings, 117; second innings, 51. The Players had 64 runs to get to win, and seven wickets to go down.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that most of the foreign exchanges are favourable, and that some large parcels of gold have been sent into the Bank of England, thereby increasing the stock to over £15,000,000, the business done in most Home Securities this week—owing in some measure to the complication of affairs in Italy—has been very moderate, and prices have fluctuated to some extent. The Unfunded Debt has ruled heavy. Rather large sales have been made, and the premium has further declined.

On the whole there has been a full average demand for money, and in most instances the rates of discount have been supported. In Lombard-street first-class short bills have been done at 4¼ to 4½; three months', at 4⅝ to 4¾; four months, 4½ to 4¾; and six months, 5 to 6 per cent. At those quotations the supply of capital is considerably in excess of some previous weeks.

With the exception of £225,000, which is still being arranged for, the whole of the £1,111,500 of Preferential Six per Cent Debentures of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada has been subscribed for. The subscription lists ranged from 80 to 84; but the board has wisely determined to allow the whole issue to be made at 80. Considering the large amount required, the success of the loan must be regarded with much satisfaction.

Rather over £260,000 in gold has come to hand, chiefly from Australia. For export there is scarcely any demand, and the amount disposed of to the bank is £350,000. The principal shipment is £114,150 in gold, and £17,350 in silver, to the Brazils. The value of the gold known to be on passage from Australia is about £400,000.

Letters from Constantinople give a deplorable picture of Turkish finances. The debts of the country, including £10,500,000 due from the Civil List, are £43,000,000.

A new banking company, entitled the "London and South African Bank," has been started, with a capital of £400,000. The shares have been done at ¾ to 1 prem. Another similar project, with a capital of £500,000, is shortly expected to appear in the market.

The committee of the Stock Exchange have been engaged in their investigations in connection with the transactions carried on for Pullinger by members of that body.

On Monday Home Stocks were far from active, nevertheless, no change of importance took place in the quotations. Bank Stock left off at 227; Reduced, and New Three per Cents, 93⅝ ¾; India Stock, 220; India Five per Cents, 106⅝; Rupee Paper, 98⅝ and 104¼; India Bonds, 10s. to 5s. dis.; and Exchequer Bills, 6s. to 9s. prem. In the early part of Tuesday prices were heavy, but, as the account passed off satisfactorily, the quotations subsequently rallied:—Consols for Money were done at 95 to 95⅜ ½; for Account, 95½, to 95⅝; the Reduced and New Three per Cents, sold at 93⅜ ½ ⅝; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 7s. prem.; Bank Stock marked 226 to 227½; and Rupee Paper, 98½, 99. There were some fluctuations in prices on Wednesday:—The Reduced Three per Cents were 93¾ ⅞ ⅝ ½; Consols for Transfer, 95⅝ ½ ¼ ⅜; New Three per Cents, 93⅜ ⅝; India Five per Cents, 106½ ⅝ ½; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 96⅝; Ditto, 1859, 96⅞ 97; Ditto Bonds, 5s. dis.; Consols, for Account, 96⅜ ½; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 7s. prem.; India Stock was 221½. On Thursday the Directors of the Bank of England reduced their minimum rate of discount to 4½ per cent. This reduction, however, had scarcely any effect upon Home Stocks:—Consols, for Money, sold at 95⅛ ⅜; Ditto, for Account, 95⅜ ½; the Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93½ ¾; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 7s. prem.; Bank Stock was 226 to 227; India Stock, New, 106½ ¾; Ditto, Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 98½.

Ocean Marine Insurance Shares have been done at 2 13-16 to 15-16 prem.; Universal Marine, ⅝ to ¾ prem.; and London and provincial Marine ¼ to ⅜ prem.

The annexed return shows the state of the note circulation in the United Kingdom during the four weeks ending April 7:—

Bank of England	£20,918,670
Private Banks	3,457,617
Joint-stock Banks	3,067,840
Scotland	3,882,292
Ireland	7,095,428
Total	£38,421,857

Compared with the four weeks ending April 9, 1859, the above figures exhibit an increase of £131,589 in the circulation of notes in England, and of £377,762 in the circulation of the United Kingdom.

In the Foreign House the transactions have been on a full average scale, both for Money and Time. Prices, generally, have shown some firmness, but the market has continued wholly free from excitement. The leading quotions for the week are as follows:—Brazilian Five per Cents, 100½; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 91½; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 86½; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 86½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66¼; Dutch Four per Cents, 101; Mexican Three per Cents, 21⅞; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45½; Russian Five per Cents, 108; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 98; Russian Three per Cents, 65½; Sardinian Five per Cents, 86½; Spanish Three per Cents, 48½; Ditto, New Deferred, 33¼; Turkish Six per Cents, 77¾; Ditto, New, 62¾; Turkish Four per Cents, 101¾; Brazilian Scrip has sold at ½ prem.

In the value of Colonial Government Securities very little change has taken place, and the transactions have been to a moderate extent, as follows:—Canada Six per Cents, 1881, 114; Ditto Five per Cents, 102; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1866, 100; Ditto, 1888 and upwards, 100½; Nova Scotia Sterling Debentures, 108½; South Australian Six per Cent Bonds, 111½; and Victoria Six per Cents, 107½.

The Miscellaneous Market continues inactive:—Crystal Palace Shares have marked 32½; Ditto, Preference, 100; Electric Telegraph, 105½; English and Australian Copper, 2⅝; General Steam, 25; London General Omnibus, 1¾; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 4⅝; National Discount, 4⅛; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 80; Red Sea and India Telegraph, 17½; Rhymney Iron, New, 5¾; Royal Mail Steam, 50 ex div.; Scottish Australian Investment, 125; Trust and Loan Company of Upper Canada, 6⅝; Berlin Waterworks, 4⅞; Chelsea Ditto, 16; East London, 126; West Middlesex, 106½; Waterloo Bridge, 2¾; Ditto, Old Annuities of £8, 28; Ditto, New, of £7, 25.

The return of the Bank of France, made up to yesterday, shows an increase of rather more than three millions in cash, 10¾ millions in bills discounted, and 26 millions in the Treasury balance. The advances have decreased 10¼, the circulation 22¾ millions, and the current accounts half a million of francs.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE (Friday).—A very limited supply of English wheat came fresh to hand to-day, coastwise and by land carriage. Good and fine samples realised full prices, with a moderate demand; but low and damp parcels moved off slowly, at the late decline in value. We were fairly supplied with most descriptions of foreign wheat. Millers operated with great caution; nevertheless, Monday's currency was supported. In floating cargoes very few transactions were reported; in prices, however, no change took place. There was scarcely any inquiry for malting barley, at irregular quotations; grinding and distilling sorts, however, ruled steady. The malt trade was in a sluggish state, yet prices were well supported. Oats commanded full quotations, but the demand for them was by no means active. Beans and peas were a steady inquiry, but flour was a dull sale.

Tea.—The public sales held this week have gone off slowly, and, in some instances, prices have had a drooping tendency. Privately, the quotations are supported; but the demand is by no means active.

Sugar.—All good and fine raw sugars have moved off steadily, at full quotations. Low and damp parcels, however, have met a slow inquiry. Sound floating cargoes have been sold at extreme rates. Refined goods are steady, at from 52s. to 55s. per cwt. Crushed is worth 49s. to 50s. 6d.; and pieces are selling at 42s. to 48s. per cwt.

Coffee.—The transactions have not increased, when compared with last week; yet prices generally, are well supported.

Rice.—Nothing of interest has transpired in this market. Prices are barely supported, owing to the dull state of the wheat trade.

Provisions.—Nearly all kinds of butter are a dull sale, and the quotations rule almost nominal. Bacon is less active, at about previous rates. Hams and lard command very full prices.

Tallow.—The demand is heavy, and prices continue to give way. P.Y.C., on the spot, is quoted at 52s. 6d. to 54s.; for the last three months, 50s. 6d. to 51s. per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is selling at 28s. 3d. per cwt. on the spot. Most other oils support previous quotations. Spirits of turpentine, 34s. 6d. to 35s. 6d.; rough, 9s. 3d. to 9s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—Rum is in improved request, at full quotations. Proof Leewards, 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d.; proof East India, 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d. per gallon. Very little change has taken place in the value of brandy. Grain spirit is in improved request, chiefly on French account.

Potatoes.—Only moderate supplies are on offer. On the whole, the demand is steady, at from 95s. to 185s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, May 10).—To-day's market was scantily supplied with beasts, in, for the most part, very middling condition. Prime breeds moved off steadily, at fully Monday's currency. Otherwise the beef trade ruled heavy, on former terms. We have to report a fair demand for sheep, the show of which was moderate, at full quotations. Lambs commanded extreme rates, with a healthy inquiry. About 300 came to hand from the Isle of Wight. The supply of English calves was limited; of foreign, good. The demand was inactive, yet prices were supported. Pigs and milch cows sold at full quotations; but the inquiry for them was far from active. Per 8lb. to sink the offal: Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 4d. to 3s. 6d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 6d.; prime Scots, &c., 4s. 8d. to 4s. 10d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s. 4d. to 3s. 8d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 10d to 4s. 4d.; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 3s. 6d. to 4s. 10d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 2d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 10d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; lambs, 5s. 6d. to 7s. 2d.; suckling calves, 19s. to 25s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 22s. to 30s. each. GALVANIC ANTI-RHEUMATIC CHAIN BANDS (Pulvermacher's Patent). The numerous speedy cures continually effected by these Chain-bands in neuralgia, tic-douloureux, sciatica, gout, and all rheumatic affections, as also in epilepsy, paralysis, nervous exhaustion, &c., make them daily more appreciated, and fully justify the favourable reports on their extraordinary efficacy, published by the most eminent medical and philosophical authorities, as stated in the new book, "Pulvermacher's Medico-Galvanic System of Self-Application, &c." Overwhelming, however, as these scientific reports will be found, many persons may feel more convinced by the perusal of authentic records of cures ; some hundreds out of a vast number, have therefore been collected, and added to the pamphlet, which can be obtained through all Agents, Booksellers, Newsagents, and at J. L. PULVERMACHER'S, 73, Oxford-street, London (adjoining the Princess' Theatre). Chain-bands, 5s., 10s. 6d., 18s., 22s., according to power.

FINE ARTS.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

[FIRST NOTICE.]

After a mature consideration of the contents of the Royal Academy Exhibition, just opened, we regret to be obliged to say that it is no improvement upon many of recent years, but, on the contrary, is, in many respects, falling off from them. In one or two particulars it is marked by considerable changes—some, perhaps, would call them reforms—upon former practice. In the first place, the uppermost tiers of pictures—"tripers" or "sky scrapers," as they were sometimes called—has been discarded, a simple and elegant arrangement of line ruling has the dismal octagon room, also, so long the condemned cell of unbefriended genius, is no longer used for that use, and only to see again and again Landseer has a fine picture, remarkable for the fulness and variety of material contained in it, and the investigation of which claims a considerable share of time and study. Phillips's "Royal Marriage" also attracts the little throng of connoisseurs who will always congregate before sudden gown in the Black Brunswicker, and Sir A. Stuart's and O'Neil anatomical tours de force in the varying tints of white satin; and O'Neil enforces a passing glance by the impetuous appeals of his "Volunteer" in the shipwreck scene; and, when we have said that we have named all that secure anything like marked attention from the public. The combined industriousness of the whole of the hanging committee is not equal to that commanded by the "Eastward Ho!" of 1858, or even by the "Back Again" of 1859, or the "Derby Day" of 1856, or even by the "Derby Day." The exhibition, in short, is a most dry one, under the former and present regime, and the more pleasant one enough as a whole, but is deficient in salient points, as has been pointed out to the members; or, as a certain friend remarked metaphorically, but intelligibly enough, "You don't go away carrying the brass."

In one class of works we have, indeed, no falling off: the portraits are as numerous, as large, as staring, as bewildering, as glaringly coloured as ever, so as to exaggeration to say that they occupy full half the wall space in the rooms, and, being for the most part disfigured with the best known and worst likenesses, their numerous and superficial areas render the more conspicuous by the very absence of the merit by the which, under like conditions, pictures in other years generally surmounted. Connected with portraiture, however, there is one whole branch of art which is unusually prominent—namely, photography, the fierce struggles against the inroads of photography, has at length departed boldly from the wide wall space in the large rooms, which is now occupied by architectural and other drawings, leaving behind only a few straggliers, by no means choice specimens, to take refuge in the screen in the small room, and to appear more at an obsolete art.

Proceeding now to commence our critical survey, we remark, upon examining the catalogue, that the members of the Academy are less numerously represented than on almost any former occasion. Mr. Charles Bell Birch, Macbeth, Mulready, T. Faed, Pickersgill, R. W. Ward, Boxall, and T. F. Lewis are altogether absent; and of those who "grace by their presence" the greater number have but a single exhibit. The whole numbers of paintings by the academic body are a hundred and ten, of which thirty-seven are portraits. The numerous artists excluded from the publicity, however obscure and unsatisfactorily, to be afforded only by the great liberality of the council of the year, and its catholic rules and regulations of the academical body, might find in this poor display of industry on their part an additional ground of sarcastic complaint against the tendency to the meagre contributions by members of the establishment, they might, if they ask, in it what use there is in electing for art themselves should exercise so large and irresponsible a control over the labours and prospects of the whole body of artists of the country?

Millais' "The Black Brunswickers" (29) is a composition of two figures, intended, we believe, as a companion to his last celebrated effort, "The Huguenots," and very similar to it in character and purpose. The Black Brunswickers, as is evident from the crowned band, bent on avenging the death of the Duke of Brunswick, their master, and pledged neither to give or receive quarter, are a band of ruffians of a desperate kind to their breast. A young officer of which they are about to depart for the field of Waterloo, when his vengeance is distracted by the appeals of a girl, with downcast eyes, presses him back, whilst with one hand behind her she attempts to keep from the sight of her lover that is endeavouring to open. There is a perplexed and half-annoyed expression on the face of the young officer as he turns from the girl the discovery of a lurking passion for him which he had not sought for; and he evidently hesitates for the instant how to act. The scene, in which the spectator is made the unseen witness, is partly diverted by the introduction of a little pet dog, who, standing on its hind quarters, seems to beg the young man's pardon for the rough usage as too frequently the case with Mr. Millais, are not in the best drawing, being too long and ill-proportioned, and the figures are not sent of roundness about them, and of air between them and the wall which closes in the background. The general treatment of the various articles of equipment and costume is something marvellous: the bridled coat is perfect to a stitch, the white satin dress is absolutely satin, and the book of the girl, and other properties, is the very model of highly-polished leather.

Phillips has unusually brought out the exhibition in the difficult portrait subject, "The Marriage of the Princess Royal with Prince Frederick of Prussia, January 25, 1858." The former is the daughter of Queen Victoria, and the ceremonies had been, by judicious arrangement, moulded into something like picturesque form. The scene of the bridegroom's entrance into the church in the middle of the picture is especially pretty. The likenesses are, for the most part, good, being a little conventionalised, perhaps, and there, and the colour is partial to "merry as a marriage bell." On the opposite wall of the room to the Academicians hangs (159) the scene his favourite Spain. There is much intelligence displayed in the contents in the expression of the bull-fight audience, and the fashionable life impinging in insipid propriety behind her fan—her handsome mantilla, her waxen profile, her white, upturned, earnest gaze. The colour throughout is admirable for richness of tone and solidity of touch.

In Ansdell's picture, "The Lost Shepherd" (59), is on a peculiar subject: a lost shepherd is frozen to death in the snowy wilds of the Highlands, mourned by his wife and child, and by a sympathising group over him. Of the latter, also, we may be allowed to question the originality, reminding us as it does of the sympathetic drawing of "The Dead Soldier" by her Royal Highness the Princess Royal, in previous years, and we do not well know for what reason. Putting aside these considerations, however, the execution is the most masterly, vigorous, and successful that ever came from the artist's hand.

A. Hart shows a good deal of careful study and clever designing in his historical picture (74). "Archbishop Langton, after a Mass in the Cathedral of Old St. Paul's, on the 25th of August, 1214, consecrating the Earl of Pembroke and the Barons to exhort from King John the Ratification of the Conditions of the Charter of King Henry I." The figures, which are numerous, are all in animated movement, and the faces are full of the most earnest expression; but the colour is pale and inharmonious—a fault which may also be attributed to "Shared Music" (179), and "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" (135), and which seems to have become a habit with the artist which he will not easily get rid of.

"The Flood in the Highlands" (160), by Sir E. Landseer, will challenge a long inspection, so full is it of materials, all with more or less of meaning implied in them. As the title indicates, it represents one of those dreadful inundations so common in the highlands after the autumn rains, by which whole villages have sometimes been destroyed. Here has just passed over a cottage, and the raging torrent has left to the thatched roof of their dwelling, where, gathering around them some few articles of furniture and any of their stock they have been able to collect. they await in anxiety and alarm the course of events. The assault proceeds from the left, where a flat of timber, which has swooped in his cloak, shuts his eyes against a scene which he has evidently witnessed with horror in the past. Near him is the young wife and mother, who, with terror depicted on her face, presses to her bosom an infant of apparently a few months old, that is eagerly nestling to her, their faces strongly marked with alarm, complete the human group, commingling with whom are various domestic animals, a goat, a sheep, and a dog, the last of which, by their looks, show that they share in the alarm of their masters. Between the foreground and the middle ground in the terror of the storm, is seen struggling to force its way over the side of the thatch to obtain a footing, a stag of large dimensions, in the exaggerating rage of life—his eyeballs starting from their sockets—and near the point of exhaustion. On a ladder which leans against the wall of the cottage, and which is seen to the left, has, under the excitement of terror, has just laid an egg, which has broken as it fell, and is found on the ground at the bottom. Near him is the body of water running under the very eave of the cottage door some ducks are contesting the ability of their wings against the violence of the tumultuous party. On the roof of a neighbouring cottage the inhabitants are seen pulling in desperation at a rope to secure the cattle which have been carried away by the flood, and is on the point of being signified. To complete the disorder and terror of the scene huge trees are seen uprooted and floating by, and, in the distance, against the walls of the cottage, overhead; and angry rain-clouds flying across the sky, and that too with terrific rapidity, are indicated. Acknowledging a grand poetic conception and great pictorial capabilities in the subject of this work, we are compelled to say that these abilities in the subject are unequally to have grappled with it in its severer conditions. He does not ride the storm, nor direct the whirlwind. The striking terrors of the scene are not sufficiently felt in the midst of the realities, but poetic imaginings and reminiscences, softened by time and distance are required to give the grandeur which is wanting. Owing to them is marred by the introduction of trivial incidents—to wit, the egg and cat business, and the ducks and the dog, which, with the exception of the latter, are disadvantage to the unity of the picture. Moreover, the high finish and eminently successful handling bestowed upon the accessories and animals generally, and the too evident appearance of the tameness of brush displayed in the more essential portions of the picture, viz., the figures, water, and sky, are pronounced feeble and unequal to the grand.

In scripture subjects we have Dicksee's remarkable specimen, "Harmony," not entirely satisfactory, imitating some of the best externals of the early church painting, but without the spirit and purpose which gave it life. The composition of Solomon (153) on the subject of Mary, who, "rising up in those days, went into the mountainous country with haste," is pleasing. The figure of Mary is attenuated, mean, ill drawn; and the pale face, with its prominent nose and drooping mouth, is not the ideal of the mother of the Saviour. The unassisted Solomon is not the ideal of the mother of Solomon. The landscape in which she is placed is spotted with poppies, "pale, pale poppies," and "leaves the light of love," and, still further to carry out the suggestions of the text, a lamb is about to be sacrificed on the altar of some heathen deity, and is seen in the picture. Surely here we have little made of a great subject.

Mr. Frank Dicksee's "Romeo and Juliet" (4) has great respect and admiration for the dignified pathos, the grandeur, and purity of soul depicted in the Saviour; but the scene is unfortunately for a picture painted in 1854, and revised in 1851, is more elevated in sentiment and more harmonious in treatment than the present, and mystifying work.

By a rapid descent from the sublime to the droll, we now alight upon Frith's picture of the exhibition, "Pegwell Bay, Kent—A Recollection of October 5, 1858" (141), the date having reference to the appearance of the comet, which is duly accommodated therein. This must be pronounced a very curiously of minute handiwork; every part, from the sun shade of the lady to the fish of the basket, is worked up with the finish of a miniature, and the tables and wide-spreading rocks, the ladies' red-striped petticoats and the white shells in their tiny baskets, being painted in the very highest style of the art. The accessories which render every microscopic detail palpable to the naked eye.

Mr. Goodall's picture, a terrible scene from a dark passage in history—so full of distinction and abnormal colour that it is, we have no doubt, destined to be a favourite for popular engravings, and to mean the first French Revolution. "The Tuileries, June 20, 1792" (163), was the scene of a wild, fiendish mob, who, with the most frightful oaths and execrations, broke in, taking refuge behind a barricade of tables and chairs in the hay of a window, bore with dignified composure the insults and violence of the infuriated rabble that poured in a torrent through the palace. The faces of the latter are full of expression, and the whole picture is remarkable for the qualified by the introduction of the young girl, who is recorded to have been mobbed by the gentle sex, and who, with her mother, is seen sympathising with the royal sufferers. Elmore has created a difficult subject in a masterly manner; and in point of colour, which some story, cannot fail to rivet attention, and command admiration as a work of art.

Frith, in his sole exhibit, "Claude Duval" (162), takes another incident from an age gone by, and which is more suited to the days of Charles II. than to the present century in the nineteenth century. And is remarking that we must append the addition that we look upon it as a failure. The story is one of the highwaymen, Mulready, and more recently those of Hook, O'Neil, and others, including some by Frith himself, which have proved popular from their romantic suggestion; but it is not by going back to the adventures of highwaymen that the public is to be fed with pictorial literature. The school will be supplied, or its character sustained. Nevertheless, there is such admirable execution in the present work, such excellent drawing and brilliant colouring displayed in the execution that, albeit we regret the selection of the subject, we must admire the work. Interesting we cannot when we look upon it but congratulate ourselves that we have the opportunity given us now we could produce such a work. The story, it "is related (says my Macaulay, vol. 1) how Claude Duval, the French page of the Duke of Richmond, took to the road, and how, after a career of professional gallantry, and had the honour to be named first in a Royal proclamation against notorious offenders; how, at the head of a gang of fifteen or twenty, he stretches which many was a booty of four hundred pounds; how he took only one hundred, and returned the rest to the owner to encourage him to travellers; how he fell in love with a lady, who fainted at the sight of him on the heath." The artist has improved upon the simple outline of recorded facts by introducing a variety of other figures: the lady's father, and mother, and sister, and little brother, all in great tribulation and distress; whilst, contrary to the finality of the original contract, the work of palace is still going on with the usual melodramatic effects—black masks, pistols, terrified old women, &c. But the poor lady herself, who is pale with affright, yet spot a smile, the with her large, lustrous eyes scanning curiously her ruffian partner, she manages to balance herself through the steps of the cornute, is a masterpiece of invention and study.

Our first illustration from the present exhibition shall be after a very graceful production by Mr. F. Wyburd, entitled "A Fairy Tale." The scene is the porch of a cottage in Switzerland or the Tyrol, where a happy, fair-haired mother is seated, surrounded by her household gods, sitting away the afternoon by the perusal of a fairy tale. The two elder children are wide awake, and are listening with all their ears to the story. The youngest has fallen asleep, resting its head on its mother's knee. A cozy, sunny glitter plays over this interesting group, which, as well as all the finishing of the place, bespeak a well-regulated and cheerful home.

THE WINDINGS OF THE USK.—By TENNANT.

Amongst Mr. Tennant's views of Welsh scenery with which he every year gratifies us we have seldom met with one so pictorial in the composition, so rich in colour, and so true poetry of landscape, as "The Windings of the Usk, from Dingy Park, the seat of Captain Rolls, M.P." It was in the exhibition of the Society of British Artists, and of which we give an Engraving. The windings of the silver river through their rich foreground lead the delicious verdure, dotted here and there with trees, till they are lost amid the distant undulating hills. The cottages interspersed here and there diversify the features of the scene, to which the greatest interest are attached by the introduction of a group of cattle and some straw next to the in the foreground is bright and clear, true to nature, and most satisfactory in effect.

THE FRENCH GALLERY.

The French Gallery in Pall-mall is another instance of the deficiency of exhibition room in London of which we have lately spoken. We are informed that "the contributions offered this year to the French Gallery have been more numerous than on former occasions, and the room being too small to include them all," it was found necessary to exhibit them in successive batches. Accordingly, the first collection for the season was closed on the 2nd inst., and the amended exhibition, including several new contributions, was opened to private view on the 4th. It must be added, however, that the great bulk of the exhibition remains the same, the new exhibits, with one or two exceptions, being unimportant in character, and few in numerous.

Amongst the new comers is Louis Knaus, who received the secondclass medal in 1859, and first-class medals in 1855 and 1857. His picture, "Le Premier Enfant," is a charming little "Family Portrait," in its merit, and of a sort which might almost entitle him to be called the Wilkie of France or Flanders, for we are not sure where he was born. The picture represents a young Parisian figure, pretty, full of character, full of life. In the centre is the Curé of the parish, with the baby in his arms, which he is holding with the air of intense admiration of a small circle of intimates, including the grandfather and grandmother. The little sister who stands at his toe to obtain a full view of its marvellous features. The air of bland complacency and patronising benevolence about the reverence is charming, and full of character. A little way off, seated in the convalescent mother, who, dressed out in her best, and seated in an easy-chair, looks on at the scene with delight. Behind her upon the little treasure she has been the means of adding to national wealth, and which, with the husband, a sturdy young Parisian, who looks on at the honours paid to the new-comer with a broad grin of satisfaction, complete the youngsters from the circle. The arrangement is pleasing in the most natural and pleasing, and it abounds in nice touches of character, depicted appearance of the whole group. The drawing is full of colour, which is opaque and heavy.

Mr. Charles Lucas, a pupil of Louis Cros and Leon Colgnet, who received various medals between 1838 and 1855, and was made officer of the Legion of Honour in 1859, we have a large picture on a most distressing subject—"Scene at the Conciergerie Prison during the Roll-call of the Last Victims of the Reign of Terror, 9th Thermidor, 1794." The scene is the prison of the conciergerie with the victims of, revolutionary violence, in various groups, and with various gradations of despair, from the wildest and most frantic down to stupefying grief and passive resignation, as the Secorder of the Revolutionary Tribunal proceeds to call the names of the unhappy victims on the roll-call for the day to enter the fatal cart. The numerous figures introduced include many personages of historic note—as Madame Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI., Madame Roland, the Princess of Monaco, the Princess de Chimay, the Marquis of Montmorency, Mdlle. Sombreuil, and others, and they are variously disposed as to avoid any appearance of overcrowding. Some of the passages are extremely fine, and especially the expression of regret and their beauty of arrangement. The group consisting of Mdme. Sabine Vivrille, with her child in her lap, Mdlle. Colgny, and the Bishop de St. Brieux, is extremely good and of striking interest; so also is that on the other side of M. Amazine, his wife, and daughter. The latter is seated in a chair, with her head resting on his hand, is Andrié Chenier, the poet, swapt in meditation, the impersonation of a calm mind in the midst of strife.

Another important historical work is "The Gladiators," by Jean Leon Jerome, pupil of Paul Delaroche, who boasts of several medals, and was made officer of the Legion of Honour in 1855. We have here a severe, and we believe truthful, realisation of that deadly struggle between man and man, for the delight of the Roman people fought and tore each other to pieces "to make a Roman holiday." The seats around the arena are crowded with spectators. In a chair of state on the right sits the Emperor—bloated and sensual in appearance—between a group of flatterers, by the side of whom others are lifting their hands, exclaiming, "Ave Cesar Imperator, morituri te salutant!" the accustomed homage before entering the bloodstained arena. In the middle ground, attendants are dragging the ground, dragging off the dead with hooks attached to ropes, and sanitizing the place with sprinkling of water. The whole picture is one of intense savagery, seen through an appropriate atmosphere of gloom, the light of heaven being kept out by an expansive tentroof over the arena.

Amongst the landscape and genre subjects are one or two which we shall notice. "The Bird's Nest Hunters," seen by moonlight, with a priest, attended by a boy carrying the crucifix, hurrying to attend a dying parishioner, is a fine picture, entitled "Expectant," painted in his pleasing grouping and nice handling in the young girl "Fortune-teller," of a group of children with costumes of the country, and in the still more agreeable composition of the same sisters in "Evening Prayer." Antoine Plasan's graceful pencil and delicate touch is also shown to advantage in "Waiting for her Hands" and "The Prayer." Prayer shows, perhaps, more character but less elaborate finish than the others. "The Fortune-teller," "Waiting," and "The Housekeeper." Henrietta Browne, whose "Sisters of Charity" we have already more than once admired for its tenderness and insipidity in her one small picture, "Children with Game." Bauguet has a little picture, entitled "Expectant," painted in his pleasing manner, but neat and exact manner, about the moral of which we must be allowed to hold some misgivings. In a lowly hovel is a lowly mother and her child, the latter with its little hands clasped hands to exclaim, "Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep which was lost." The lady has found it in the form of some broken the bed in the form of a rather elegant young lady, dressed in the perfection of fashion, and evidently belonging to the upper ten, and with having just been thrown down carelessly beside her. An honest country wench—the young lady's sister, perhaps—stands by her face full of wonder and astonishment. The subject is not also the happy finding and interesting repenting, which, however, as we said above, is a capital picture, and altogether unexceptionable. Of Cate at Cafebah, Tangier," is Oriental in character, and a rich piece of colour. Leclercq has three small pictures, "Mare and Foal," and "Fawns in Cover," we have spoken of before. Juliette Boulmer adds a very clever and ship-painted picture, "Cesar Going to the Wars." Rosa Bonheur contributes "Cattle Drinking," which, as far as the cattle goes, is satisfactory enough, but the effect of which is marred by the uncertain, skimming light under which, for the purpose of "effect" the artist chooses to show them. There is something unreal about the whole affair, and we reprehend, unquestionable evidences of shortcomings which are attributable generally to that school. In colour more particularly it is still unfortunate—dingy, cold, and opaque—as it has been always from the time of Poussin downwards. This defect is one which, we need hardly say, is especially fatal to landscape-painting, for which in the abstract, it must be added, the French artists appear to have but little predilection and little of natural gift at present. In the representation of Nature, in her varied tints of beauty, the English school, it must be admitted, still holds supremacy, with as proud and undisputed a title as her patron genius Britannia "rules the waves"—as represented in that very gaudy effigy, by Mdme. Jerichau, which hangs over the chimneypiece here.

O'NEIL'S "EASTWARD, HO!" AND "HOME AGAIN."

Those who retain the impressions conveyed by O'Neil's noble dramatic picture "Eastward Ho!" exhibited in 1858, and of his sequel picture, "Home Again," exhibited in 1859—and who that saw those truly national works can easily forget them?—will be glad to hear that they are both now on view at the Little Gallery, 191, Piccadilly. The Alpha and Omega of the emigrant's career and of the soldier's rugged destiny are now seen at a glance, and the spectator has an opportunity, by comparing the two works and collating their several details, of following up the story of each of the personages introduced, and which, seen alone in the earlier picture, was all matter of speculation and doubt. Thus, the young wife who grasped her husband's hand so convulsively at the moment of leave-taking is, in the second picture, holding his crutches (for he has been severely wounded on the field) whilst he is tenderly lifted into the boat alongside the vessel; and in numberless passages we see what havoc has been played in many a household since the farewell—how one has been made a widow, how another has become a widower, and how each figure in the group adds to the general interest which the war and its results have imparted to the scene. And yet all is not sorrowful; for there are many bright eyes and smiling faces which speak most eloquently of the improved fortunes and proud honours that have rewarded gallant service. But we need not review further the details of pictures already so extensively known, and which, we have no doubt, thousands will flock to see in their new abode.

THE WINES OF BURGUNDY.

(To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.)

An error, in ascribing a French wine to a wrong locality, by one of your correspondents, is easily rectified by remembering that, in the Revolution of 1789, the old French provinces were absorbed in the departmental system then adopted. The term "Burgundy" is still retained by the population of France in many instances besides the locality of a wine. Burgundy now comprehends the three departments of the Côte d'Or, the Yonne, and the Saone and Loire; and in one or all of the three is burgundy wine alone produced which will justify the appellation. The finest growths here are justly considered the most perfect wines in the world, if not according to English prejudices—which judge all wine by the standard of port—a good second-class wine when not deteriorated by the addition of a fifth part of brandy, with other substances used to adapt it, as the case may be, to any palate. Wine is the product of the grape alone, carefully fermented, without factitious mixtures of any kind. Such is burgundy presumed to be, and such it will really be found. It is singular that a wine of such high merit has not made more way in England. A notion prevails that it will not keep on this side of the Channel. Nothing can be more erroneous. I have drunk it as sound in England as in France. The very first-class, it is true, can rarely or never come here, because the produce is so limited that the gourmets of Paris will pay any price for it, and the English merchant could not find an adequate supply. The second-class growths, some of which are little inferior to the first, do come here occasionally, but not in a quantity adequate to their merited celebrity, and even then are encountered only at the tables of individuals of refined taste.

Some, indeed nearly all, of the first-class burgundies are grown in the department of the Côte d'Or, near Dijon. The vineyards which produce the wine of the Clos Vougeot, and those of Nuits and Beaune, lie near together. Fine flavour, rich perfume, and great delicacy mark these wines, which are of a deep colour and gratefully stomachic. The extent of vine-ground in the Côte d'Or is about 25,000 hectares (the hectare is 107644.143 English square feet), and the produce is 578,252 hectolitres, of 22 imperial gallons each, or 12,721,544 gallons. The estimated value is 15,500,000f. The larger part of the wine not consumed at home is sent to the north and central departments, and to the north of Europe, but not southwards, because it will not bear great heat, if only for a short time. Among the more celebrated of these wines are the Romanée St. Vivant, Romanée Conti, the Richbourg, La Tache, and St. George, the Corton d'Aloxe, and others. Those I thus name are not made in large quantities, being dependent on peculiarities of soil. The Corton, for example, is produced from forty-six hectares of vineyard, and only returns ten or fifteen litres per hectare, according to the season. Beaune, Pomard, Volnay, Meursault, and Mont Rachet, the best of three kinds, come from the vineyards of the Côte d'Or. At no great distance Chambertin, the favourite wine of Napoleon I., is produced. Nearly all three fine wines grow in the districts of Nuits and Vosne, except the Chambertin.

In the department of the Saone and Loire, the second division of old Burgundy, the produce is 14,540,724 imperial gallons, valued at 13,027,079f. The third division, or the department of the Yonne, produces 19,505,288 imperial gallons, valued at 23,638,886f. The wines in all three departments are both red and white. The arrondisement of Mâcon is noted for a variety of wines, of which those from the commune of Romaneche are the best. The next in value are the wines of Pouilly, Fuissé, and Solutre, of each of which there are two classes, in price about the same as those in the commune of Romaneche. There is a light, delicate, agreeable wine made in the vicinity, called "Moulin à Vent." Some of the wines here are found mousseux, effervescing, naturally, and without the maker's intention. The red wines in the department of the Yonne are ten or twelve, well noted in the country. The Chainette, Migraine, Clarion, Quetard, Pied de Rat, and others are of the number. The wines of La Palotte, and two or three inferior qualities in the communes of Irancy and Cravant, are mostly made of the tresseau and romain grape.

The white wines of the Côte d'Or most noted are those called Santenot, between Volnay and Meursault, and some white wines in the same locality, with the celebrated Goutte d'Or, the Perrières, and Genévrières. They are agreeable, with a slight taste of sulphur. Near Meursault is grown the celebrated Mont Rachet, a white wine of exquisite bouquet and delicious flavour. It is of three kinds—L'Ainée, Chevalier, and Batard. The second brings only half the price of the first, and the last only two-thirds of that of the second. The vineyards are small, and adjoin each other. No difference is observable in site or soil, such differences making one of those natural phenomena for which it is impossible to account. The finest wines are only sold in bottle—the Romanée Conti, for example, which brings from six to seven francs on the spot, and the Clos Vougeot five or six in the country.

I hope I am not going too much into detail, considering the small space you can afford for a correspondence. It suffices that the wines of Burgundy merit to be better known here, as well as pure wine of all kinds, and not of France especially; by impure I do not mean wine blended with wine for assortment, but with extraneous substances consisting of alcohol, elderberries, Portuguese geropigas, and the like, which make the English palate foreign to the pure natural growth of the vine. Some of the wines of the Mâconnais are cheap, and excellent summer drinking, and very soon, with the change of duties, may be on almost every table, for the prices will be low as soon as the effect of the vine disease is recovered. The Burgundy wines have more solidity than those of Bordeaux; indeed, some complain of their heating quality, but this depends upon the habit of body of those who take them. Some of the Côte d'Or wines have been known to bring 12f. the bottle.

Fearing I have trespassed upon your columns, and made of a slight error a peg to hang a long epistle upon, believe me, Sir, your most obedient servant, Cyrus Redding.

London, May-day, 1860.

Marriage of a Judge.—On Thursday, the 3rd inst., at Mortlake Catholic Church, the Right Hon. J. D. Fitzgerald, Judge of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland, and late Attorney-General, was married to Jane, sister of Viscount Southwell. The service was performed by the Right Rev. Bishop Grant. Among the general company were the Earl of Carlisle, Right Hon. Edward and Mrs. Cardwell, Mrs. Washington Hibbert and the Misses Hibbert, Sir Bernard Burke, Mr. L. Waldron, M.P., Hon. H. Dormer, General Yermoloff, Mr. and Mrs. Devereux, Mr. Leeming, Mr. Thomas Fitzgerald, Mr. R. Caddell, and the Very Rev. Dr. Doyle. After partaking of an elegant déjeûner at Lord Southwell's, the newly-married pair left town for Tunbridge Wells, on their way to Paris.

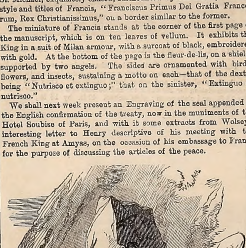
The Irish "Mortara" Cases.—One of these cases has been settled, apparently to the satisfaction of all parties. Mr. Henry Corr, to whose guardianship the two young Murphys were so mysteriously transferred, appeared in the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench last Saturday, and satisfied the Chief Justice and Mrs. Murphy's counsel that the children were in his custody in virtue of their father's will. Mr. Corr undertook, at the same time, that the mother should have free access to them, on condition that she made no attempt to instil Protestantism into their minds.——The case of the Sherwoods was next taken up, and attachments were ordered to be issued against Ellen Blake and Catherine Davis (the grandmother of the children) for not having put in answers to the writs of habeas corpus; but, as it transpired that the orders of the Court were not duly served on the parties, fresh writs were ordered to be issued. In the event of any further miscarriage of justice, the substitution of service on the servant of the house to be deemed sufficient.——The case of the Henrys was again postponed.

Relics of the Past,

A MEDIUM OF COMMUNICATION ON ANTIQUARIAN SUBJECTS BETWEEN MEN OF LETTERS, SCIENCE, ART, &c.

This corner of our Journal is intended to supply a place not unsuccessfully occupied a few years back by the articles entitled "Memorabilia." Like those papers, it will be devoted chiefly to the reproduction of anything of interest,—whether in the shape of extracts from old books, old songs, old letters, or of old pictures, monuments, &c., &c.,—which tends to popularise the manners, costume, and history of former times. It will further resemble "Memorabilia," we trust, in proving a ready and favourite channel for the reciprocation of intelligence among those specially interested in the object for which it is established.

TREATY OF PEACE CONCLUDED BY WOLSEY WITH FRANCIS I. OF FRANCE IN 1527.



FRANCIS I.

The above Portrait, and the Seal represented at page 444, form an interesting memorial of that famous treaty by which "a perpetual peace" was "confirmed eternally" between England and France in 1527. They are attached to the French counterpart of the treaty, signed by the French King, "Francoys," preserved in our Record Office, and, from their exquisite workmanship, form an appropriate accompaniment to that beautiful manuscript. On the obverse of the seal, which is of the purest gold, Francis is represented sitting on his throne, under a superb cloth of estate, the curtains of which are drawn back and held open by two angels, and two smaller angels are assisting to keep them open at the upper part. Two lions are crouching at the feet of Francis, and form the footstools to the throne. The whole is surrounded by an inscription on a broad border—"Plurima servantur Foedere, cuncta Fide." The reverse has three fleur-de-lis on a plain shield, inclosed in the collar of the Order of St. Michael, exquisitely chased, surmounted by the crown, with the style and titles of Francis, "Franciscus Primus Dei Gratia Francorum, Rex Christianissimus," on a border similar to the former.

The miniature of Francis stands at the corner of the first page of the manuscript, which is on ten leaves of vellum. It exhibits the King in a suit of Milan armour, with a surcoat of black, embroidered with gold. At the bottom of the page is the fleur-de-lis, on a shield, supported by two angels. The sides are ornamented with birds, flowers, and insects, sustaining a motto on each—that of the dexter being "Nutrisco et extinguo;" that on the sinister, "Extinguo et nutrisco."

We shall next week present an Engraving of the seal appended to the English confirmation of the treaty, now in the muniments of the Hotel Soubise of Paris, and with it some extracts from Wolsey's interesting letter to Henry descriptive of his meeting with the French King at Amyas, on the occasion of his embassage to France for the purpose of discussing the articles of the peace.

PIEDRA DE LA VIRGEN, OR PIEDRA DE GUADALUPE.

This singular stone is situated on the steep side of a rocky hill in the immediate vicinity of the Ferreria de Guadalupe, the ironworks established by our energetic countryman, Mr. J. F. Hahn, among the mountains, about fifty leagues from the city of Mexico, hitherto a desolate and almost uninhabited region. It is not easy to understand how this stone can have been formed and poised so nicely by the hand of nature as to stand firmly on its slender leg, composed of numerous pieces, as is shown in the Engraving, at the same time that it may be moved easily by a pressure of the hand. It appears as though the smallest force must precipitate the stone down the hill, or that in the oscillation it must fall back upon you. Yet it has withstood the tempests of ages and the shocks of earthquakes, which are by no means unfrequent in that region. The stone is much venerated by the Indians, and on the day of Santa Maria de Guadalupe is decorated with garlands. It is a limestone formation, and was produced most likely by the gradual crumbling or shelling off of the material composing the leg. The upper portion or joint, it will be observed, is very narrow and flattened. This stone is 9½ feet high, 3 feet 9 inches broad, and 3 feet 9 inches wide. There are many natural curiosities in the vicinity—among others a tall rock of magnetic iron, which rises like a pulpit, the attractive force of which is very considerable.

THE MENDELSSOHN FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

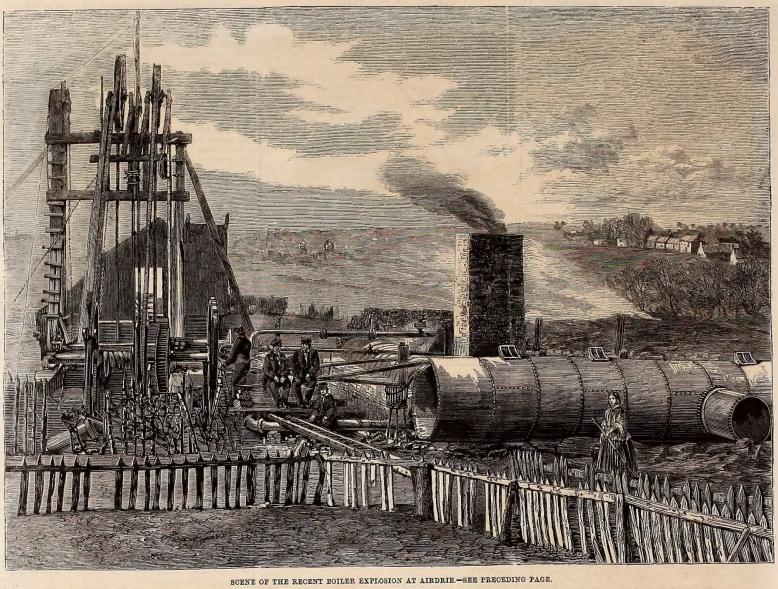
A grand festival, in honour of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy, took place yesterday week at the Crystal Palace, and due homage was rendered to the illustrious composer, both by the crowds who were present and by the admirable manner in which the great oratorio of "Elijah" was performed. It is not our purpose to enter here into an examination of the musical performance—an account of which, by our musical critic, will be found in another column. We confine ourselves to a brief description of the after proceedings in connection with the subject of our Illustration on page 461.

At the termination of the oratorio the company adjourned to the second terrace in front of the main building, where Bacon's statue of Mendelssohn was formally unveiled. The whole of the upper fountains were in play during the unveiling, and the German choral societies, which had mustered in great force, sang a hymn in honour of the inauguration of the statue of their gifted countryman. Public curiosity was now concentrated upon the torchlight procession; and, owing to the course it took, the inequality of the ground, the reflection of the water, and the beauty of the surrounding scenery in the mild moonlight, the effect was exceedingly novel and beautiful. First was descried a fire far off at the boundary of the garden. Sprites, as it appeared, flitted about and lighted their torches as if preparatory to an incantation. Then blue and red lights burst out and gave a strange unearthly glare to the landscape, and, at its greatest intensity, the sprites and the torches began slowly to stream away right and left, winding like two great glittering serpents in and out through the dim and shadowy foliage. Gradually the lights came nearer and more distinct. They danced in the fountains, and the latter—in obedience, as it were, to the impulse—sprang again into life, foamed and sparkled and shot upwards, and by the reflection seemed to liquefy the brilliant colours of the illumination. When the two serpents of light at last met on the terrace they were happily destroyed in a huge bonfire. As a whole the Mendelssohn Festival was a decided success.

The annual account of the Merchant Seamen's Fund has been made up. It shows that in 1859 pensions amounting to £4643 fell in, and new pensions to the amount of £3922 were granted. The pensioners now upon the fund are 21,406 in number, and the annual amount of their pensions is £58,631.

Last Saturday the newly-appointed Chief Justice of Ceylon, Sir E. S. Creasy, late Deputy-Assistant Judge of the Middlesex Sessions, was entertained at dinner at the Ship Hotel, Greenwich, on the occasion of his appointment. About 100 gentlemen were present, Mr. Serjeant Shee occupying the chair.

BOILER EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIFE AT AIRDRIE.



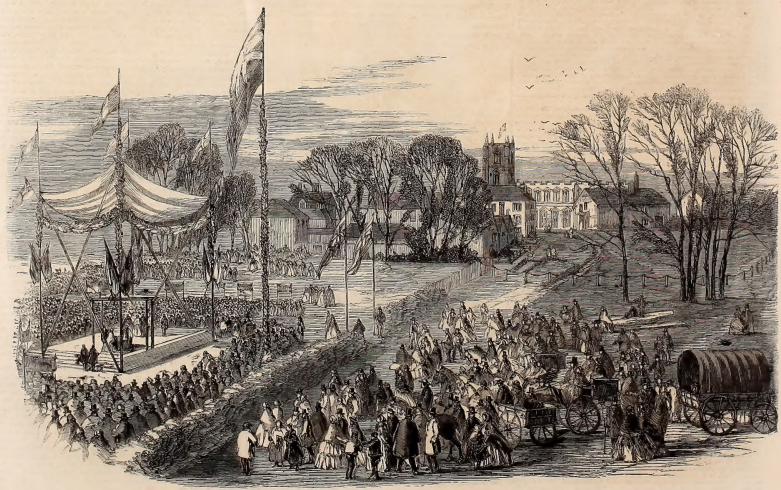
The utmost alarm was created in Airdrie, on the 20th ult., by the explosion of two boilers at the pit, situated about fifty yards from the High-street, belonging to the Summerlee Company. Three men—James Saymers, fireman; William Ramage, oversman; and William Cathcart, residing in Sterling-street—were killed; and another, William Millar, engine-man, was much injured. The engine-house, the engine-stalk, and the engines were laid in total ruin. The report of the explosion was heard miles off, and bricks and other débris were thrown to a great distance all round the scene of the explosion. There were three large boilers, two of which were completely destroyed. One of them was cut into two nearly equal parts, which were thrown to great distances in opposite directions. One portion of it, said to be from three to four tons weight, was thrown a distance of about one hundred and fifty yards, over a range of two-story buildings, into High-street. The other portion of the same boiler, the estimated weight of which was about five or six tons, was thrown a distance of more than two hundred yards. Its course was clearly traceable, large portions of the earth having been scooped out in several places, while in others deep indentations were made, until at last it struck a tree measuring upwards of four feet in girth, which was broken in the middle as though it had been glass, the under portion riven up by the roots, and the upper portion carried with the boiler into the ravine below. The second boiler seems to have been shivered to pieces. A portion of it about fifteen feet in length had been almost completely straightened, and thrown to a distance of nearly three hundred yards. Other portions of it lay scattered east, west, north, and south. The third boiler was lifted from its seat and thrown across the place where the two powerful engines once stood.

Our Engraving of the pit's mouth is from a photographic view taken by Mr. Hood, of Airdrie, shortly after the fatal occurrence.

LONG MELFORD SCHOOLS, SUFFOLK.

On Friday, April 27, the picturesque village of Long Melford was the scene of considerable excitement, it being known in the neighbourhood that Lady Parker, the wife of Sir W. Parker, Bart., of Melford Hall, had kindly consented to lay the foundation-stone of the new schools now in course of erection for this extensive village. The ceremonies of the day commenced with Divine service in the parish church, and this large and ancient edifice was crowded with a most attentive congregation. The Rev. W. S. Baker read the prayers; the Rev. Sir Lovelace Stamer, Bart., formerly Curate of Melford, preached from the text, Psalm cxliv., ver. 12:—"That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." At the conclusion of the service a procession was formed at the old school, or Ladye Chapel, and consisted of the Sudbury brass band; the Rev. W. S. Baker and Sir L. Stamer, Bart.; the other clergy present, two and two; the architect, A. H. Parken, Esq.; Churchwardens and members of the local Building Committee; the Wardens and Brethren of Melford Hospital; all the Workmen employed on the building, headed by Mr. Fordham, the contractor; Lady Parker, and Mrs. W. S. Baker; followed by three hundred and fifty School Children, each class bearing a banner.

The day was cold, but the sun shone brightly and the bells rang out a merry peal. The green was covered with people, certainly not less than 2000, including some of the principal families of the neighbourhood, being present. As the procession wound its way down the green to the ground it formed as pretty a picture as could be imagined. On the spot where the stone was to be laid an elegant canopy had been erected, decorated with flags and evergreens, and beneath this Lady Parker having taken her position, the Rev. W. S. Baker read some prayers; and her Ladyship then proceeded to lay the stone, assisted by A. H. Parken, Esq., the architect, repeating in a clear and audible voice after the Minister, "In the faith of Jesus Christ, and in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, we lay this stone." The Old Hundredth Psalm was then sung, and the National Anthem, in which all present joined. Before dispersing three hearty cheers were given for Lady Parker, who had taken her part in the day's proceedings with remarkable grace and ease. Through the kindness of the Rev. W. S. Baker and Mrs.



SCENE OF THE RECENT BOILER EXPLOSION AT AIRDRIE—SEE PRECEDING PAGE.

Baker, the children were regaled with cake and wine before leaving the ground; and at the Rectory a party of clergy and ladies sat down to luncheon; Sir W. Parker, E. K. Bence, Esq., the Rev. H. B. Falkner, and others, each receiving parties of friends at their respective houses.

The schools are to be in the Elizabethan style of architecture, that style having been selected as being most in accordance with Melford Hall, Kentwell Hall, and other local buildings. They will provide accommodation for 250 children, and consist of a boys' school, 40 ft. by 18 ft., and class-room; girls' school 40 ft. by 18 ft., and class-room; and infant school, 40 ft. by 20 ft. There will be two residences for master and mistress, and all the necessary outbuildings. A. H. Parker, Esq., of London, is the architect; and Charles Fordham, builder, of Melford, has taken the contract at about £1600.

CHESS.

PALAMEDES.—1. You must have copied the game erroneously. So many of the moves are censurable, however, that it is not worth the trouble of rewriting. 2. Keep as much as possible to problems of the description recommended in our last. 3. We are not aware that the chess magazine you mention is still extant.

I. GILBERT.—1. True; but if Black played as you suggest White would not elect to let his Pawn remain unpromoted He would take the Rook, making a Queen, and win easily. What M. Petroff intended to prove was that if Black played the best moves White might yet make a drawn game if he were permitted to leave his Pawn as a Pawn at the eighth square. 2 The problem shall have attention.

 The answers to very many communications are unavoidably deferred.

(King's Knight's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. K.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)

6. P to K R 4th	P to K R 3rd
7. P takes P	P takes P
8. R takes R	B takes R
9. Q to Q 3rd

(The customary move is 9. Kt to Q B 3rd; whether Mr. Kolisch's novelty is superior, time will show; it may be safely preferred to the once favourite but now exploded play of Greco—9. Kt to K 5th.)

9.	Kt to K R 3rd

(Intending to play Q B to K B 4th if White advanced his K's Pawn.)

10. P to K Kt 3rd	Q to K 2nd
11. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q B 3rd
12. P takes K B P	P to K Kt 5th
13. K Kt to K Kt 5th	Kt to Q 2nd

(Black could here have won the K Kt by playing P to K B 3rd, but in so doing he would have afforded his adversary time to disengage the Q Rook and Bishop and organise a terrible attack.)

14. P to K 5th	Q Kt to K B 3rd

(If he had played 14. P to Q 4th, then followed—

15. B takes P P takes B

15. Q B to K 3rd	P to Q 4th

4. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th
5. Castles	P to Q 3rd
6. P to Q B 3rd	Q B to K Kt 5th

(This move is now believed by many players to give Black the advantage in the opening.)

7. Q to Q Kt 3rd

(Hazardous. His only safe response appears to be 7. B to K 2nd)

7.	B takes Kt
8. B takes K B P (ch)	K to B sq
9. B takes Kt	R takes B
10. P takes B	P to K Kt 4th

(This is decisive: White has no way of escaping from the consequences of this advance.)

11. Q to Q sq	Q to Q 2nd
12. P to Q Kt 4th	B to Q Kt 3rd
13. B to Q Kt 2nd	P to Q 6th

3. P to K 5th	Kt to Q 4th
4. P to Q 4th	P to Q B 4th
5. Kt to Q B 3rd

(P to Q B 4th, followed by P to Q 5th, would have given White a formidable array of Pawns in the centre.)

5.	P takes P
6. Kt takes Kt	Q to Q R 4th (ch)
7. P to Q B 3rd	Q takes Kt
8. Q takes Q P	Q to Q R 4th

18. Q to Q B 2nd	Q R to Q B sq
19. P to Q R 3rd	Q R to Q B 5th

23. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Q R 4th
24. B to Q 4th	P to Q Kt 5th
25. Kt to K Kt 5th

(Mr. Allix observes that he only took this step after considerable reflection, his combination comprising the seven following moves, but that he overlooked Black's obvious play of 32. P to Q 3rd:—

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

THE Right Hon. and Most Reverend Thomas Musgrave, D.D., P.C., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, Visitor of Queen's College, Oxford, Governor of the Charterhouse and King's College, London, and Elector of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, who died on the 4th inst., at his town house, 41, Belgrave-square, after a very short illness, was the son of William Peete Musgrave, a respectable tradesman in Cambridge, where his Grace was born, March 30, 1788. He became, at the age of eighteen, a student of Trinity College, Cambridge, and was fourteenth wrangler in 1810. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of Trinity, and was made a M.A. in 1813, and Almoner's Professor of Arabic in 1821. He was in 1831 Senior Proctor and Bursar of his college, and obtained the incumbency of St. Mary the Great, Cambridge. He was in 1837 made a D.D. and consecrated Bishop of Hereford, and was translated to the archiepiscopal see of York in 1847. His Grace married, the 12th December, 1839, Catherine, youngest daughter of Richard, second, and sister of Henry Manners, third and present, Lord Waterpark. The amiable and talented Archbishop was much loved and respected, and his death is the subject of general regret. The archbishopric of York is the most ancient metropolitan see in England, having been founded by the British King Lucius in 180. Its first recorded Bishop was St. Paulinus, and its second the famous St. Chad, who before his translation was Bishop of Lichfield. The most eminent subsequent prelates of the see were Geoffrey Plantagenet, Richard Scrope (who was beheaded), Cardinal and Lord Chancellor Kemp, Cardinal Bainbridge, Cardinal and Lord Chancellor Wolsey, Dr. Richard Neale, Lord Keeper Williams, Dr. Hutton, and Dr. Markham, tutor to George III.

SIR W. F. FOWLE-MIDDLETON, BART.

SIR William F. Fowle-Middleton, second Baronet, of Shrubland Hall, Suffolk, who died on the 2nd inst., at his town house, 52, Grosvenor-place, after a short illness, was the eldest son of Sir William Fowle-Middleton, the first Baronet, by his wife, Harriet, daughter of Nathaniel Acton, Esq., of Bramford Hall, Suffolk. He was born on the 19th of August, 1784, and was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1807. He succeeded to the baronetcy, on the death of his father, on the 26th of December, 1830. He married, on the 2nd of August, 1825, the Hon. Anne Cust, fourth daughter of Brownlow, first Lord Brownlow, by his wife, Catherine, daughter and coheir of the late Sir Thomas Dru y, Bart. Sir William has had no issue, and consequently the baronetcy becomes extinct at his death. Sir William leaves two sisters—viz., Mrs. Dashwood, of Stamford Hall, Leicestershire, and the Dowager Lady Broke, of Broke Hall, Suffolk.

GENERAL SIR WILLOUGHBY COTTON, G.C.B.

GENERAL Sir Willoughby Cotton, G.C.B., K.C.H., Colonel of the 32nd Regiment, was the only son of Admiral Rowland Cotton, R.N., by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Willoughby Aston, Bart., and was the grandson of Sir Lynch Salusbury Cotton, Bart., M.P., and the first cousin of the Peninsular and Indian hero, the present venerable and gallant Field Marshal Viscount Combermere. Willoughby Cotton was born in 1783, and after being at Rugby entered the British Army in 1798. His career was long and brilliant. He served in Germany and Denmark, and was then Adjutant-General to the Duke of Wellington. He was with Wellington in the Peninsula, and shared in some of the hardest work and brightest exploits. He was at Vittoria, and had commands at the passage of the Adour, and at the sortie at Bayonne. He was Commander-in-Chief and second member of Council at Bombay from 1847 to 1850. He was made a G.C.B. in 1840, and became a General in 1854. Sir Willoughby Cotton married, in 1806, Lady Augusta Margaret, eldest daughter of George William, seventh Earl of Coventry, by whom he has had (with a daughter, Augusta Mary, married to Colonel H. Vaughan Brooke, C.B.) two sons—viz., Willoughby, who died a Captain in the 44th Regiment, in 1841, and Corbet, a Colonel in the Army, who married, on the 11th of May, 1847, Christina Augusta, daughter of Sir Charles Des Vœux, Bart. General Sir Willoughby Cotton died on the 4th inst.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL BERKELEY DRUMMOND.

LIEUT.-GENERAL Berkeley Drummond, who died on the 3rd inst., at his seat, Eaglehurst, Fawley, Hants, was the third son of Charles Drummond, the eminent banker of London, by his wife, Frances Dorothy, second daughter of the Rev. E. Lockwood, of Dews Hall, Essex, and was the great-grandson of the Viscount Strathallan, attainted by act of Parliament, who fell at Culloden on the side of the Chevalier. Lieut.-General Drummond was born on the 27th of May, 1796, and, entering the British Army early in life, served for nearly fifty years in the Scots Fusilier Guards. He was with that regiment (then called the 3rd Guards) in the campaign of 1814, and in Holland, including the storming of Bergen-op-Zoom. He was in the glorious campaign of 1815, and was at Quatre Bras and at Waterloo with the 2nd battalion of his regiment in the 2nd brigade of the 1st division, under the command of Sir John Byng, now Field Marshal the Earl of Strafford. Drummond was made a Colonel in 1841, a Major-General in 1851, and a Lieut-General in 1859. He was Colonel of the 3rd Foot, and Extra Groom in Waiting to the Queen. Lieut-General Drummond married, on the 5th of April, 1832, Maria, daughter of the late William Arthur Crosbie, Esq. The gallant General's second brother was the unfortunate and amiable Edward Drummond, Esq., who was in 1843 shot dead in the open street at Charing-cross by the lunatic M'Naghten. The actual representative and head of this highly respected family of Drummond is William Henry, present Viscount Strathallan.

The Australian newspapers announce the death of Mr. E. M. Whitty and of Mr. E. Syme, both of whom were formerly connected with the London press.

VOLUNTEER DEMONSTRATION AND FLORAL FETE AT CHELTENHAM.

ON Wednesday, May 2, the Cheltenham Horticultural Society gave a floral fête in honour of the Gloucestershire Rifle Volunteers, who for the first time met shoulder to shoulder, to the number of nearly 700, under the command of Colonel Purnell, assisted by Major Noel and Captain Adams. By eleven o'clock the streets of Cheltenham began to assume an animated appearance, as one by one the principal shops began to close and the various excursion trains to arrive; and towards one o'clock company after company of the volunteers poured into the town. The muster was in front of the Queen's Hotel, one of the largest and most beautiful hotels out of London. The companies of Rifle Volunteers and the Cheltenham troop of Royal Gloucestershire Hussars were by two o'clock all assembled, and Captain Swiny, who acted as Adjutant for the day, with Sergeant-Major Sutton, formed them into the following order:—Cheltenham troop of Royal Gloucestershire Hussars, Captain Colmore; 2nd company Gloucestershire Rifle Volunteers, Captain Guise; 3rd ditto, Captain De Winton; 4th ditto, Captain Cholmeley; 6th ditto, Captain Hunt; 7th ditto, Captain Gibney; 8th ditto, Captain Sergeaunt; 9th ditto, Captain Bathurst; 10th ditto, Colonel Wood; 11th ditto, Captain Vizard; 13th ditto, Captain Morphy.

All being ready, and the word given, the splendid band of the 11th Hussars, which had been in waiting at the Queen's Hotel, proceeded to the head, and the march commenced to the beautiful gardens at Pittville, where the Flower Show was to be held. Throughout the whole line of march the crowd was so great that the utmost efforts of a strong body of police, under the command of Mr. Nicholls, assisted by about twenty recruiting men of the line who formed the advance-guard, were required to effect a passage for the procession. The bells of the old church rang merry peals, and flags and banners of every description decorated the houses of the principal tradesmen. Besides the band of the 11th Hussars, five bands of the different companies present played upon the march.

The procession having arrived in the gardens, where about eight thousand of the leading families of the county and town were assembled to welcome the volunteers, and the regiment having been formed into line, was dismissed to fraternise with the company. The Flower Show appeared to give universal satisfaction, and was a very good one even for Cheltenham, which for the last three or four years has obtained a great celebrity for its horticultural fêtes. The principal attraction appeared to be the azaleas, which were very beautiful and in large numbers. The greatest order and regularity prevailed throughout the day, and the committee are entitled to great praise for the perfect manner in which all their arrangements were carried out. We have much pleasure in hearing that the society will lose nothing by the happy idea of inviting the county volunteers to their opening show, as the receipts at the gates alone amounted to nearly £200. In concluding our report of the proceedings we cannot do less than record the unanimous opinion of every one who took part in the fête that the society is fortunate in having a secretary so active and obliging as Mr. Cochrane, under whom all the arrangements were perfected.

SICILIAN AFFAIRS—PORTENTS.

THE Sicilian question has assumed an attitude which is as perplexing to those who wish well to the cause of liberty and constitutional government as the decision of some recent cases has proved to the judgment of certain British juries. Premising an entire repudiation of the idea which is in the course of industrious promulgation in France, that England is influenced by interested motives in the consideration of the contest that is going on in Sicily, it will not be denied that every possible sympathy is felt in this country for those who have revolted against the most flagitious rule in Italy. The appearance of Garibaldi on the scene is such an omen of success, that those who wish well to the insurgent Sicilians must necessarily experience a sense of gladness at such an accession of aid to their side. But, then, the morality of international law intervenes with the utmost potency, and it is impossible to controvert the fact that the famous partisan General in his present expedition is acting the part of nothing more or less than a buccaneer; that he is guilty of simple piracy; and, if he were to be caught in arms in Sicily, not a voice could with propriety be raised to save him from the penalty of such an offence. It is, certainly, a curious dilemma of feeling and opinion. The cause into which Garibaldi, with characteristic impetuosity, but with equally characteristic skill and preparation, has thrown himself, has received such a moral sanction and approval that it needs but success to gild his proceedings with international approval. A prosperous termination of his undertaking will produce the chartered result; he will be the hero who has created a new free State, and will have burst through all the meshes of those precedents and rules which, in the abstract, ought to entangle him to his destruction. The only question as far as he is personally concerned then is, what are the probabilities of his success? There can be little doubt that the enterprise is one full of hazard; its issue is open to great doubt; but, assuming that this bold stroke should give form and substance to a movement which has not yet been found sufficiently formidable to cause much serious alarm to the Neapolitan Government as to paralyze its efforts at resistance—for, if the reports which have reached us be true, there was no lack of preparation to meet Garibaldi's expedition, or any disposition to suffer him to land without opposition on the Sicilian territory—the question falls into a new and a more important phase. The consideration that will then arise will be, what course will be taken by the Governments of Europe—those, at least, who have either arrogated to themselves, or to whom has been ceded, the conduct of that which may be called international police?

Of course, a suspicion has arisen that the Government of the King of Sardinia has not exercised too much vigilance in reference to the proceedings of Garibaldi, and that the doctrine of non-interference has been carried on their part to an extent which is not covered by any legitimate interpretation of the term. However that may be, it is supposed that, in the first instance, the tone adopted in the communications on the subject which passed between Paris and Turin was that of remonstrance if not of reproach; but the latest indications seem to point to an inclination on the part of the Emperor of the French to sympathise with the insurrectionary movement in Sicily. His jealousy of another addition to the sovereignty of Victor Emmanuel, which, it is said, was neither slight nor wholly unavowed, is supposed to have yielded to an idea that an eventuality may arise in Southern Italy which was hoped for but disappointed in the distribution of the territory of the centre of that peninsula. It is believed that the notion of replacing another Bourbon by another Napoleon and this time at Naples, has been revived, and that the suggestion of such a course would be preferred to the insisting on an accession of territory to France as a compensating balance to any enlargement of that kingdom of Italy which, it is imagined, is the dream of "Il Re galantuomo" and the ultimate end of the policy of Cavour. Predicating a sincere belief on the part of France in the existence of a desire by England to possess herself at least of the protectorate of Sicily, there is a probability that such a project as that above mentioned is simmering in that dark, deep, and mysterious cauldron, the brain of Louis Napoleon. Such a scheme is consistent with a policy which, even at times when the alliance between France and this country was ostensibly the most intimate, was believed to influence the secret councils of the Tuileries, and that is the diminution of English influence and the curtailment of English territorial possession in the Mediterranean. To this has been attributed much of the unkindly spirit which has been exhibited towards this country by Spain; skilful agency having been in operation to create a feeling in the Spanish mind of outrage on their rights in the occupation of Gibraltar by the British. To some such machination, it has been thought, was owing the Spanish expedition to Morocco, in which, like an adroit stroke at billiards, Tangier and that part of the African coast were to be played off against Gibraltar. The disturbances which not long ago occurred in the Ionian Islands were very ostentatiously attributed to Greek intrigues, secretly fomented by Russia; but there were not wanting those who were of opinion that, although the electric chain was long drawn out and circuitously placed, that the manipulation of the machine whence the first sparks were elicited was in a nearer, a more powerful, and a more dangerous hand; and that here again the object was to strike at that English dominance which is represented by the strength of her garrisons and the blustering of her pennons in that sea which somebody long ago intimated might by possibility be turned into a French lake. This view of the situation involved, however remotely, in the present condition of affairs in Sicily is one which demands careful and anxious consideration. Already there are murmurs, which come as it were along the air, of new and secret combinations, of clandestine treaties, and something more palpable than diplomatic understandings or sympathetic policies.

To speak plainly, it is stated that there is at this moment a understanding between France and Russia, which was hinted at some years ago, in an actual fact. It is supposed that the undisguised policy of conciliation adopted by France towards Russia after the Crimean war was not even then wholly fruitless, and that so early as that time an arrangement was come to that, if the great northern Power could be content to bide its time, eventualities would surely arise which would make it the interest of France to contribute towards the objects of the inheritance of the designs of Peter the Great in Eastern Europe—for a consideration. Prophets, after this event, now say that they were aware that schemes of territorial aggrandisement were even then framed in the mind of the Ruler of France; that the policy of annexation which has lately been begun was even then not only resolved upon, but its details arranged: that the co-operation of Russia, active or passive, according to the necessity of the case, was secured by a promise of a similar interference with any of her designs on Turkey, as early as 1856. However this may be, it is at least a coincidence, that, at the moment that France has actually entered on a course of annexation, and at a moment when a plan for the annexation of Savoy and Nice to the family of Napoleon among the Sovereignties of Europe is considered to be a possibility arising out of the state of affairs for the kingdom of Naples, Russia, hitherto so reserved in her international action, who has so sedulously sent down a statement that she was absorbed in her internal affairs, suddenly takes a formal and decided step, so decided as a convocation of the diplomatic representatives of the other Powers, for the purpose of declaring that she has reasons for occupying the Danubian Turkey which, on the face of them, are sufficient to justify her material interference on behalf of the Christian subjects of the Porte. To be sure, we hear that M. Thouvenel has declared to Lord Cowley that a convocation of that kind was not necessary to take place in this matter; he was of opinion that it should not be an action by Russia alone or by Russia and France united, but should be a combined action of the five great Powers." Most excellent and moderate counsel. But one considers that Count Walewski once, "in a conversation," expressed his "private opinion" to Lord Cowley that no annexation of Savoy to France was contemplated. In some novel or other we have met with a character who has been known drawn for him, which represented a man whose peculiarity was such that if you wanted to know his real opinion you had to assert something which you fancied was in consonance with his feelings, and if you got a prompt and decided denial of your inclination that way, you were sure that you had got at the actual state of his mind. The application of this illustration is, we suppose, sufficiently obvious in relation to the communications with regard to French policy made by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of France to the Ambassador of England.

We might easily enlarge on the views which we have endeavoured rather to indicate than broadly to discuss. It would be easy to dilate on a rumoured understanding with Russia, still as a maritime Power, and which suggests the completion of a union of all the maritime Powers in Europe except England; it would be easy to point out the palpable efforts which are making by means of supporting the project for cutting a canal through the Isthmus of Suez to create that French influence in Egypt which always follows the flooding of a country with Frenchmen of any and every calling, and in the course of which the faculty of regarding their nationality as a secondary affair on which they touch is always so sedulously, and generally so successfully, developed. Much, and more to this effect, might be produced for the purpose of illustrating the drift of such organisations as that of the widespread, and in many cases the predominant, influence of England in every part of the globe, and especially in the Mediterranean. But a topic of this kind should, after all, be dealt with tentatively and with caution. The time may not have arrived to speak trumpet-tongued to the people of this country with regard to events which as yet are only looming in the future, which we believe to be no distant one; but having arrived at certain convictions in regard to the possibility, if not to the probability of those events, at least we only discharge a duty when we insinuate a warning.

A series of experiments were on Wednesday week completed at Chatham, under the direction of Captain Boxer, on certain improvements effected in revolving and repeating firearms, by means of which the inventor, Sergeant-Major Storey, of the Royal Engineers, has succeeded in doubling the number of shots fired from a revolver, making it, in fact, a revolver of fourteen as well as seven consecutive shots, without reloading or recharging. In order to avoid the delay, and often hazardous inconvenience, of reloading, it has hitherto been the custom for each chamber of a revolver to be provided with a second cylinder, and on the charges of the first cylinder being fired a partial discontinuing of the weapon has to be presented while the second loaded cylinder being substituted, the pressure is resumed. The inventor has overcome this difficulty by providing a sliding mode destitute of separate cylinders, and of chambers for each barrel, in the cylinder. Either of the series of chambers is discharged in the ordinary manner, the bullets from each passing through the appropriate barrel. By a change of the hammer, which is effected in an instant, the other series of chambers may then be fired in like manner, the bullets passing through the other barrel. The chief peculiarity of this invention is that it can be applied to every description of repeating firearm now in use, and can be easily engaged or foreign service; and, although double the number of shots may be fired, not the slightest change or modification of the ordinary mechanism of the lock or trigger is necessary. To make the same machinery act with an arm giving the power of fourteen or sixteen consecutive shots only requires an alteration in the number of teeth of the "ratchet." The new weapon, although double barrelled, has but one cylinder, one trigger, and one lock and hammer.

The 7th Lancashire Rifles Militia were inspected at Bury last Saturday by Major-General Douglas, who expressed his satisfaction at their efficiency. The regiment assembled on the first ult. for twenty-seven days' training, and since then the recruiting has gone on satisfactorily.

The Times says that the "most eminent gunsmith and shellmakers who have inspected the two mortar-bursts now being taken to pieces at Chatham, state unanimously that had the shells called into use been made with the stock and reliance of their heavy mortars they would have gone to the bottom before they had fired a dozen shells.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

General Goyon has been nominated Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. Count Montemolin and his brother have arrived in Paris. The Russian Grand Duke Nicholas arrived on Monday evening in Paris, and was received on Tuesday morning by the Emperor.

On Monday next the Senate will discuss the petition against increasing import duties on pig iron.

The Constitutionnel publishes an article, signed by M. Granguillot, which says that the reply of Count Cavour to M. Thouvenel proves that Piedmont as well as France energetically blames the audacious attempt of Garibaldi.

The Moniteur de la Flotte of Sunday says:—"It is announced that the Mediterranean squadron has received orders to be ready to sail in order to be sent again on a more distant mission, respecting which no particulars are known."

The French Minister at the British Embassy, in support of the fund for the relief of distressed English subjects in Paris, terminated on Thursday, with a most brilliant success.

In order to arrange the question of the annexation of Savoy, M. Thouvenel has addressed the following declaration to the programme which has been drawn up by France on the subject of a Conference:—

"For better preserving to the Duchies of Modena and Parma the character of neutrality stipulated by Art. 92 of the Final Act of Vienna, France consents that the said districts shall remain without the line of the French custom-guard and that they shall form a separate commercial zone, under special regulations."

NORTHERN AND CENTRAL ITALY.

The news of Garibaldi's departure produced a sudden decline in the funds at Turin, from which there had been no recovery on the latest intelligence. The state of affairs is unchanged in the Government, but Count Cavour is inundated with despatches on all sides demanding the repudiation of the adventurous soldier. The Piedmontese Government has not yet received a reply to the letter he is whose success to the expedition he does not say.

The meeting of the Chamber of Deputies in their Constituents have commenced the examination of the Treaty of Cession of Savoy and Nice to France. The members of the Opposition have declared their intention to ask for an adjournment of the discussion, and will make proposals to that effect to the Chamber. The Parliamentary Committee has communicated instructions thereupon to the Ministry. The commissaries who have been appointed are favourable to Government.

The Provincial Council of Chambery has addressed a note to the Chamber of Deputies, requesting that the Treaty of Cession of Savoy shall be promptly carried into effect, in order to avoid dangers, uncertainty, and suspension of business.

The garrison of Florence has been reinforced and the National Guard called out, in consequence of apprehensions that some attempt may be made by the partisans of the ex-Grand Duke, whose inflammatory placards having been posted.

A Papal Consulate-General has been opened at Florence, Leghorn, Bologna, and Ravenna.

THE PAPAL STATES.

General Lamoricière continues to organise the Papal troops at Orbieto. It is asserted that General Allagrino, the commanding officer at Ancona, has been reduced to the non-effective.

The Pope has received 1,000,000 scudi for the Roman Loan.

Some members of the Sacred College have suggested to the Pope the convocation of an assembly, at Rome, in which every Roman Catholic Power should be represented by some person of eminence in active person of note. This assembly, after examining the real state of affairs in the Papal States, would point out such reforms as it considered necessary and which are not. The Holy Father appears much pleased with the idea, which, if realised, would make the Sacred College itself the arbiter of its own destinies.

The French Ami de la Religion has itself taken up the cudgels in favour of the evacuation of Rome by the French troops are fixed; and furthermore states that the first detachment will leave Rome in May.

SPAIN.

The Spanish Government has resolved to demand explanations by the steamer Maryuis of Habana in the Mexican waters by an American vessel.

Marshal O'Donnell arrived in Madrid on the 10th inst., and was received with enthusiasm. Two columns, consisting of the troops from Africa, which took place on the 11th, was a very imposing spectacle. The gallant soldiers' arches were erected, and the houses were decked out with flags.

The Correspondencia of Madrid maintains the authenticity of the terms of the renunciation of Count Montemolin, which it recently published.

HOLLAND.

The Dutch Government has presented to the States-General a bill for so modifying the laws relating to the municipal Charity, the sum of £1,400,000 demanded by the Ministry for the purpose of defraying the cost of the partial reconstruction of the Prussian army on a war footing.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The members of the newly-organised Council of the Empire have received their appointments, which are signed by the Emperor. The first sitting of the Council opens next fortnight. Count Rechberg Benedek is endeavouring to bring about an arrangement between the Government and the Hungarian Diet, which has the sincerity of the Emperor in the Council of the Empire, tending to reassure the latter and determine them to sit in the Council. Count Forgach, the Minister of the Interior, who is considered the real chief of the Liberal party in Austria, has declined the post of Councillor of the Empire, which was offered to him.

A remarkable letter has been inserted in an official paper at Pesth, badly spelt and worse written, which is considered the real chief of the Imperial Government before she accepts the proposed restorations.

The solemn inauguration of the monument recently erected in honour of the late Archduke Charles, the victor of the battle of Aspern, took place at Vienna on Thursday.

The Presse publishes the following telegram, dated Pesth, May 13:—"The Archduke Palatine of Hungary has published for morrow, allowing the constituted superintendents to assemble in order to consider the question of sending deputies to a general conference, and to make proposals for a synod. Free choice of superintendents and curates will be granted. The trials pending against Protestants have been suspended."

The Anglo-Hanoverian treaty of July, 1844, respecting the Stade dues, has been prolonged for a further period of six months.

The news that another civil war had broken out in Morocco is confirmed from several quarters. The Spanish plenipotentiaries have returned from Tetuan.

EUROPEAN CONGRESS.—There are still some reports and conjectures afloat of the European Conference, which seems no nearer than it was at first. Austria, it is said, refuses to admit Sardinia as a member of the Congress on the ground that Count de Cavour has declared Piedmont to have no concern with the claims of Switzerland to the neutralised districts of Savoy, and that Sardinia is not one of the great Powers.

France, it is said, is very determined to settle the question of Chablais and Faucigny to Switzerland, though she is willing to exclude a portion of those districts from the neutralised territory, and to make arrangements to yield any portion of the neutralised territory, the meeting of a Conference seems wholly useless.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office:—

It appears that Mr. Douglas received 145 votes out of 303, but 202 votes were requisite for his selection as the Democratic candidate. The delegates from the Southern States have refused with Mr. Douglas's support or declaration of principles adopted by the Convention—apparently because it was not sufficiently explicit on the question of slavery, and because it was not the Democratic Convention, and proceeded to withdraw—separating from the Convention that they may be able to form a separate Convention. A committee schism that they may be able to form a separate Convention. The Governor for the First Empire the department of the Maritime Alps, formed by the arrondissement of Nice, has 108,000 inhabitants, and a population of only 181,000."

A NOVEL TOBACCO MANUFACTORY IN PARIS.—A gigantic work of some days ago for selling what was supposed to be smuggled tobacco, but which was subsequently found to be a perfectly legal tobacco, has terminated with a regular gang, carrying on their fraudulent practices on a most extensive scale. The police, having discovered that the dens in the first resided at Belleville, M. Gutzwiller, a commissary of police, was sent to the latter locality, where he found to be in operation, communicating with a garden, and well calculated for any illicit operations. Upon the commissary's approach the inmates of the house were able to obtain admission, the commissary, in a loud voice, ordered the door to be opened, which was immediately complied with, and he was met by a man. On entering the place a strong smell of tobacco was perceived, and upon a search being made, a waggon was found loaded with snuff, and by the side of it a man, in an adjoining room was found a quantity of powdered snuff. The commissary did not remain long in bed, apparently very ill, and the other parts of the disturb her, but proceeded with his search through the manufacture of spurious premises, where all kinds of apparatus for adulterating of burnt leather, cigars, and also a quantity of powdered wood, were found. In an adjoining room was a man engaged in the manufacture of snuff, in making a composition sold as snuff, were found. On again entering the room where the woman lay, the commissary, who had begun to entertain suspicions that her illness was simulation, and that she had been put there for the purpose of concealing the manufacture of snuff, went up to her and said, "This shall not last did, and beneath the bed clothes he found a quantity of powdered snuff. The commissary immediately matters he discovered a number of packets of snuff, and which were to be used in the re-manufacture of snuff. The husband and his wife were arrested, and sent off to the Prefecture of Police.—Seligmann

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION.

THE landing of Garibaldi in Sicily has kindled anew the flames of civil war in that island, and has raised the Sicilian insurrection from a quarrel between the King of Naples and his subjects into one of deep interest for the whole of Europe—introducing, as it does, a new element into Continental politics, and involving Italy, as it possibly will, in the gravest consequences. Despatches from Naples, Vienna, and Paris, announce that Garibaldi's expedition, or at least a part of it, effected a landing in Sicily, yesterday week, at or near the town of Marsala, situated on the western extremity of the island. It would seem from the brief and somewhat conflicting accounts received that two steamers conveying Garibaldi's followers had arrived at Marsala, and that the disembarkation of the men had been commenced or completed before two Neapolitan steam-frigates could interrupt their operations. One of Garibaldi's steamers was captured and the other sunk; and the Neapolitan frigates seem to have fired on the men who had landed, and to have caused them some loss. The Vienna telegram affirms, singularly enough, that the Neapolitan firing was stopped during two hours by English steamers, and could not be resumed till the English officers had returned from the shore to their ships. "The Royal troops," says the Naples despatch, "have marched on to meet those who had disembarked;" and the Vienna despatch asserts that the Royalists were engaged with Garibaldi's followers when the mail left. As Garibaldi certainly quitted Genoa with three steamers, it would follow, from these accounts, that one of them must have proceeded to some other destination than that of Marsala; but it is to be observed that one despatch from Paris says that the disembarkation at Marsala was made from three steamers; and if that statement be true it ensues that Garibaldi's whole force was with him. As to the condition in which Sicily was found, it seems certain that the insurrection in the rural districts is far-spread and formidable; and the ferment at Palermo is so great that on Saturday last menacing demonstrations were made by great bodies of the people, who were only dispersed by the fire of the Neapolitan troops.

The second version of what has taken place in Sicily since the 11th, coupled with serious reports referring to events in other provinces of the Neapolitan kingdom, comes to us by way of Paris. The Patrie newspaper, the connection of which with the Government is known, informs us on Wednesday that the insurrection has become general all over Sicily since Garibaldi's arrival; that the Royal troops are shut up in Palermo and Messina, and hold no other place in the island; that an outbreak has taken place on the other side of the Straits of Messina, in Calabria; and that the province of the Abruzzi, in the utmost north, and on the shore of the Adriatic, has likewise responded to Garibaldi's appeal. So that, should these accounts prove true, the Neapolitan Government may be regarded as being in a desperate situation.

The Patrie of May 12 contains news from Genoa to the 11th inst., stating that Colonel Medici, the friend of Garibaldi, was forwarding preparations for a second expedition, of which the Colonel would take the command, and for taking part in which 6000 volunteers have already been enrolled. All the arms have been purchased of the manufacturers. Great excitement prevails at Genoa and Lombardy, from which quarters almost all the volunteers have come. It is asserted, however, that the energetic diplomatic representations made to Piedmont would decide the Government to prevent the departure of a second expedition.

A letter from Genoa of the 8th gives the following details of the expedition :—

It seems now ascertained that, besides the two steamers Lombardo and Piemonte, with which Garibaldi set out, the English steamer which joined him, and the Sardegna, which he hoped to overtake and capture, the venturous hero found the means of securing for his purpose the Giglio, the only war-steamer belonging to the late Tuscan navy. It is a paddle-steamer of rather tiny dimensions, and neither remarkable for strength nor speed. In ordinary cruises she carries four guns and a crew of about thirty men. She anchored usually off Leghorn or Elba; and it is stated the brave adventurer laid forcible hands on her at the first-named harbour. Strengthened by this prize Garibaldi proceeded further south, and landed at various points about Piombino, Porto Santo Stefano, Talamone, &c., ancient forts and small ports on either side of the great headland, Monte Argentaro, of that Piombino principality which was called "Stato dei Presidii," and belonged for many years to Spain. I learn from a well-informed Tuscan there could be no mounted field artillery on the spot; yet it is certain that some cannon he carried away—some say as many as twenty-four. In all probability he only rifled some of the batteries close to the water's edge, and used those rusty iron pieces for the armament of his little steam flotilla. Garibaldi is a sailor, and has all the adroitness and fertility of resources which characterise men of his craft. What was of no earthly use in those dismantled old forts may, by a little contrivance, be made to do good service both by sea and land.

The Opinione Nationale gives some particulars of the embarkation of Garibaldi's troops contained in a letter which it has received :—

It was, says an eye-witness, and the author of this letter, a deeply-affecting scene. They assembled in a beautiful night at a villa on the sea-shore, at some leagues from Genoa. They were, I am told, about two thousand in number; but what is certain is, that all the alleys of the immense garden were filled with groups of volunteers, who moved down to the beach laden with muskets and cases of ammunition, which they placed on board boats for conveyance to the vessels in the offing, and all this without a word being spoken, except a few necessary orders, given almost in a whisper. Every one was serious. There were no cries, none of the enthusiasm of parade, but on every countenance the expression of strong energy and deep conviction. It is only when at sea that Garibaldi will issue his orders. He must have had some brilliant plan in his head which he has not hitherto revealed to any one, for his countenance was radiant. They left some hours after midnight, favoured by the most delightful weather.

The same letter states that Garibaldi takes with him his only son, regretting, as he said, that he had not ten, in order to take them all. George Manin, son of the President of the Republic of Venice, also accompanies him, and will be specially attached to his person.

A correspondent of the Daily News at Genoa writes as follows :—

The embarkation of the coals, stores, and ammunition, of which a considerable dépôt had been formed at Bocca d'Ase, was carried on with activity, but, in spite of every exertion, it was daylight on Sunday morning before they were fairly under way. Not having the gift of ubiquity I missed the gathering at Quarto of Garibaldi's friends and adherents on Saturday night, which, consisting of the responsible men of the expedition, had a more solemn character than the boisterous enthusiasm of the band, whose departure I witnessed from the Foce. It was moonlight, and the beautiful grounds of the Villa Spinole were crowded with the volunteers and their friends who had gone thither to bid them farewell; but scarcely a sound was heard except the measured tread of the men, as two by two they advanced to the portico of the palace to receive their arms, and then fell back silently to the post as silently assigned them. There was no shouting, no boasting. Those who were present at this remarkable scene dwell much on its exceeding stillness and gravity. You saw those who were to remain behind passing from group to group, exchanging a grasp of the hand or an embrace with their friends and kinsfolk, but indulging in no noisy good wishes or triumphant anticipations. What has come over these Italians that once we thought so purposeless and frivolous?

A friend of Garibaldi in Newcastle has received a letter dated Genoa, May 5, midnight, from one of the band of volunteers, an extract from which will show the spirit animating the expedition. He writes :—

The embarkation covers a distance of nearly five miles along the coast. This has caused us endless inconvenience, but it was necessary; for, although the Government have half winked at our proceedings, they could not permit us openly to embark without incurring the accusation of complicity. There are upwards of 2000 of us, and we are all in high spirits and full of hope. A number of the band are mere youths—many under twenty years of age, but fully 500 are tried and trustworthy fellows, who have seen many a campaign. Better marksmen are not to be found in Europe than we have with us. We have money, arms, and ammunition in abundance. Uniforms we also have to get on board—the famous red frocks that we had at Rome, and at the sight of which the miserable mercenaries of Bomba fled horror-stricken from the field of Velletri. I pant to measure swords with the myrmidons of the wretched monster who now bestrides our Neapolitan brothers. Tell our English subscribers that the swords purchased by their generous contributions shall do good service in the holy cause of liberty before they are thrown away.

The journals publish a proclamation of Garibaldi to the Italians. In this proclamation Garibaldi calls upon the inhabitants of the Marches, Umbria, and Sabina, and the Neapolitans to revolt, in order to divide the forces of the enemy.

Another proclamation, addressed to the Romans, recalls the insurrection of 1849, and urges the Romans to act like their brethren who fell in defending Rome.

The following is Garibaldi's order of the day on board the Piemonte :—

CORPS OF THE CHASSEURS OF THE ALPS.

The mission of this corps will be, as it always has been, based upon complete self-denial for the regeneration of the common country. The brave Chasseurs have served and will serve their country with the devotion and discipline of the best military corps, without any other hope, without any other pretension, than that of a stainless conscience. No rank, no honour, no recompense is held out to these braves. When the danger is past they will return to quiet domestic life; but when the hour of battle strikes, Italy sees them again in the first ranks, cheerfully volunteering to shed their blood for her. The war-cry of the Chasseurs of the Alps is the same that resounded a year since on the shores of the Tessin—"Italy and Victor Emmanuel!" and this cry will strike terror into the hearts of the enemies of Italy.

Organisation of the Corps.—Giuseppe Sistori, Chief of the Staff; Crespi, Manin, Calvino, Majouki, Griziotti, Boichetta, Bruzzisi. Türr, First Aide-de-Camp of the General; Cenni, Montanari, Bandi, Stagnetti. Giovanni Basso, Secretary to the General.

Commandants of Companies.—Nino Bixio, Commander of 1st Company; Orsini, 2nd; Stocco, 3rd; La Masa, 4th; Anfossi, 5th; Carini, 6th; Cairalo, 7th.

Intendance.—Acerbi, Bevi, Maestri, Rodi.

Surgeons.—Ripari, Boldrini, Giuliani.

Observations.—This organisation is the same as that of the Italian army to which we belong, and the rank given to merit rather than interest is that already achieved on other battle-fields.

(Signed) G. GARIBALDI.

The following proclamation has been issued to the Sicilians by Garibaldi :—

Sicilians!—I have brought you a body of brave men, who have hastened to respond to the heroic cry of Sicily. We, the remains of the battles of Lombardy, are with you—all we ask is the freedom of our land. United, the work will be easy and short. To arms, then! he who does not snatch up a weapon is a coward, or a traitor to his country. Want of arms is no excuse. We shall get muskets, but for the present any weapon will do in the hands of a brave man. The municipalities shall provide for the children, women, and old men deprived of their support. To arms, all of you! Sicily shall once more teach the world how a country can be freed from its oppressors by the powerful will of a united people. G. GARIBALDI.

The French Government has received from South Italy telegrams to the effect that all Sicily is lost to the King, who only holds his grounds within the walls of Palermo and Messina. Calabria was in open revolt, and also the Abruzzi. La Patrie, of Wednesday evening, says, the game is up with Bomba. Garibaldi is master of the island from Etna all round to the sea. Troops have gone over in thousands to the national ranks.

We have been favoured by Messrs. O'Byrne, of Adelphi-terrace, the navy agents, with the following particulars of the landing of Garibaldi at Marsala, extracted from a private letter :—

While on shore to-day, about 2.30 or 3 in the afternoon, we entered a café. In a few minutes several fellows entered—some in red, others in plain clothes, all armed with muskets and bayonets. Every one around seemed favourable to them. We at once asked what was the matter, and were told that it was a case of "Viva Italia," and Garibaldi had landed. We immediately took a walk round the town, and found the soldiers (patriots) had possession. We wanted to go out towards the country, but the officer in command, a fine-looking fellow, told us we could not pass without an order from General Garibaldi. We therefore returned to the mole for the purpose of getting on board, and met more soldiers coming in. At the mole gate we were again stopped, and there detained until a pass from the General was procured for us. On the mole we met fresh troops, who had disembarked with arms, ammunition, &c. We were informed that some two thousand had been thrown into the town, and that more would soon follow; the only thing they wished for being that they might meet the Neapolitans. They all appeared fine athletic fellows—just the sort to make short work of a dish of maccaroni. They landed from two steamers, close under the noses of the Neapolitans, who, with two steamers and a sailing frigate, had been constantly watching the coast. The smallest of these vessels could easily have prevented the landing, but she was too cautious to attempt it. After the soldiers, however, were safe on shore the Neapolitans closed in and fired on the town, or, rather, at a few stragglers on the mole—a mere waste of powder, for many of the shots fell short, and those that did reach terra firma merely ploughed up the earth that the enemy had passed over. There is no doubt whatever but that one at least of Garibaldi's vessels, particularly the rearmost, could have been cut off; but, no; they were afraid to try it on. After these had been abandoned by the Italians they were taken possession of at 6.30 p.m. by the Neapolitans, who, however, displayed much hesitation, evidently deeming "discretion the better part of valour." At this moment, as we are in the act of leaving for Malta, a steamer and frigate are opening on the town, but the fire receives no return. Whether they have artillery or not, we are unable to state. We can only remark that we saw none. The people in the town received Garibaldi and his followers with open arms, appearing as if they had been long expecting them. At the time of the General's arrival there were no Neapolitan troops in the town. Owing to the shallowness of the water their large ships could not approach.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE QUEEN AT ALDERSHOTT.

One of the grandest field-days that has occurred for some time past at the Aldershott Camp took place on Monday, in presence of her Majesty the Queen. At ten o'clock the whole division marched out of camp in the direction of the Long Valley, and formed up in masses in the neighbourhood of Cæsar's Camp. They had not been long assembled when a royal salute from the heights announced that her Majesty and the Prince Consort had left the Pavilion, and were on their way to the scene of operations. The Queen wore her usual military riding costume, and was mounted on a magnificent roan charger. She was accompanied to the ground by the Princess Alice and Princesses Helena and Beatrice, who rode in open carriages and four. There were in attendance on the Royal party the Duchess of Atholl, the Hon. Beatrice Byng, Lord Charles Fitzroy, and a numerous and brilliant staff. As the Queen passed the troops saluted in the usual manner; and the Royal party having taken up their position so as to secure a commanding view of the Long Valley and other points of interest, the troops commenced their manœuvres under the immediate command of the Duke of Cambridge, who had arrived from London, attended by his aides-de-camp, by an early train, in order to be present on the occasion. The programme for the day had been previously prepared by General Knollys, and the carrying out of the various details necessary for forcing the position of the assumed powerful force of the enemy gave occasion for a series of brilliant movements, in which infantry, artillery, cavalry, and engineers took a more or less active part. After the review the Queen and the Royal party returned to the Pavilion, and, after luncheon, left for Farnborough, under a salute from the battery on the heights near the South Camp.

A court-martial was held at Portsmouth, on Tuesday week, to try Lieut. Patrickson, of the Asia, for intoxication; but, owing to the prisoner being seized with a fit, the trial was adjourned until Thursday, when he was found guilty, and sentenced to be dismissed his ship and placed at the bottom of the list of Lieutenants.

A new and comprehensive circular of instructions has been issued to infantry regiments. One object of the Commander-in-Chief is to direct the attention of commanding officers to the necessity of constantly exercising the individual intelligence and judgment of the men under their command.

It is stated that the tremendous recoil from the Armstrong gun experienced during recent trials on board the Redwing gun-boat, renders it imperatively necessary that some other form of carriage should be substituted for the one at present in use, should the smaller class of gun boats be armed with these weapons. The greased wad that was introduced for the purpose of cleansing the gun when fired is said to have remedied the matter to a certain extent, but the fouling of the gun is still very great.

The iron-cased steam floating-battery Trusty, 14, has been towed from Chatham to the Nore in order to be in readiness for the experiments the Government have directed to be made upon her with the Whitworth gun. Her Majesty's gun-boat Carnation steamed up to Woolwich Arsenal last Saturday to ship the experimental gun.

Experiments have been made by Captain Norton at Chatham for the purpose of demonstrating the improvements he has effected with balls fired from the ordinary "Brown Bess" musket, whereby the range and accuracy of that weapon are made nearly equal to that of the Enfield rifle. In the trials made Captain Norton fired twenty shots at a target two feet in diameter at a distance of 200 yards, and struck it each time, and on the range being increased to 250 yards only one or two shots failed to strike at that distance. In firing these forty rounds there was no difficulty in loading, although the ball fitted so closely that the barrel of the musket appeared to be most effectually sponged out by the casing of the gossamer cartridge which Captain Norton uses. The balls used were cast in a mould known as No. 12, and, being inclosed in the netting of the gossamer cartridge, fits the barrel so closely as to allow of no loss by windage. The weight of power in each cartridge was two and a half drachms.

Sixteen vessels laden with corn arrived at Cork from the Mediterranean on Wednesday week, and a Belfast paper states that during the previous four weeks no fewer than sixty ships with breadstuffs had entered that harbour twenty of them from France.

THE COURT.

The Queen and the Prince Consort left Buckingham Palace soon after three o'clock on Saturday last, accompanied by Princess Alice and the Princesses Helena and Beatrice, for the camp at Aldershott, where the Royal party arrived at twenty minutes before five o'clock. Her Majesty's dinner-party in the evening included Princess Alice, Lieutenant-General Knollys, Major-General the Hon. Sir J. Y. Scarlett, K.C.B., Adjutant-General; Major-General Sir R. Airey, K.C.B., Quartermaster-General; Major-General Lawrence, C.B., 1st Brigade; Brigadier-General Brooke Taylor, 2nd brigade; Brigadier-General Russell, C.B., 3rd brigade; Colonel Chapman, C.B., R.E.; Colonel Fitzmayer, C.B., R.A.; Lieutenant-Colonel Dickson, 16th Lancers; Colonel Goodwyn, C.B., 41st Regiment; and Lieutenant-Colonel Stuart, 86th Regiment. Before leaving London the Queen held a Court, at which Senor Gutierrez had an audience, and delivered his credentials as Minister Plenipotentiary from the Republic of Honduras. Count Ludolf had also his first audience of her Majesty, and delivered his credentials as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the King of the Two Sicilies.

On Sunday at eleven o'clock her Majesty, the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and Princess Helena attended Divine service in the camp.

On Monday, at twenty minutes after ten, her Majesty left the Royal Pavilion on horseback to review the Aldershott division. The Prince Consort, with Princess Alice, accompanied her Majesty on horseback. The Princesses Helena and Beatrice followed in an open carriage. The Queen was attended by the Duke of Cambridge, General Commanding-in-Chief; Major-General Sir R. Airey, Quartermaster-General; Major-General the Hon. Sir J. Y. Scarlett, Adjutant-General; the Equerries in Waiting, and the Staff of the Camp. The review took place in the Long Valley, and at the conclusion her Majesty and the Royal party returned to the Pavilion. At half-past three the Queen, accompanied by the Princesses Alice and Helena, went in an open carriage to see the rifle practice by detachments of Guards. The Prince Consort rode on horseback to the ground. Her Majesty returned to the Pavilion at five o'clock, and immediately left for Farnborough with the Prince Consort and the Royal family. The Royal party travelled by a special train on the South-Western Railway to the private station at Vauxhall, and were escorted by a detachment of Light Dragoons to Buckingham Palace, where they arrived at twenty minutes before seven o'clock. Her Majesty had a dinner party at Buckingham Palace in the evening. The company included Princess Alice and the Princess of Leiningen, the Prince of Leiningen, the Earl and Countess of Euston, the Earl and Countess of Derby, the Earl and Countess of Hardwicke, Viscount Eversley, Viscount and Viscountess Bury, Lord and Lady Overstone, Lord and Lady Ebury, Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Somerset, Colonel F. Seymour, C.B., and the Dean of Windsor.

On Tuesday the Queen held a Court, at which the Prince and Princess of Waldeck and Pyrmont visited the Queen. Count de Bernstorff, the Prussian Minister, attended the Prince and Princess at the reception. The Countess de Neuilly and the Duke de Nemours visited her Majesty in the afternoon. In the evening the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice, honoured the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden, with their presence. In attendance were the Duchess of Athole, the Hon. Emily Cathcart, Lord Rivers, Lord Charles Fitzroy, and Lieutenant-Colonel Ponsonby.

On Wednesday the Queen gave a State Ball at Buckingham Palace. The Prince of Wales arrived in town from Oxford this morning.

On Thursday the Queen held a Court, at which Count Platen had an an audience of her Majesty and delivered a letter from his Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway. Professor Owen had the honour of delivering a lecture on "Natural History" before the Prince Consort, the Princess Alice, and other members of the Royal family.

On Friday the Queen held a Drawingroom in celebration of her Majesty's birthday.

Lord Rivers and Colonel the Hon. A Liddell have succeeded Lord Methuen and Major-General Sir Henry Bentinck as the Lord and Groom in Waiting to the Queen.

THE STATE BALL.

The Queen gave a State Ball on Wednesday evening at Buckingham Palace, to which a party of 1811 were invited.

The Picture Gallery, Green Drawing-room, Saloon, State Dining-room, and Promenade Gallery were opened for the reception.

The company began to arrive soon after nine o'clock. The Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary arrived at twenty minutes before ten o'clock. The Duke of Cambridge was attended by his Equerry in Waiting.

The Queen and Prince Consort were conducted to the Ball and Concert-room by Viscount Sydney, Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of St. Germans, Lord Steward, and other principal officers of the Royal Household. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness were accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, the Duchess of Cambridge, and Princess Mary; the Duke of Cambridge, the Prince and Princess of Waldeck and Pyrmont, the Prince and Princess of Leiningen, and the Maharajah Duleep Singh. The Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting attended the Royal party. The corps diplomatique and the general company followed.

The Queen wore a dress of white crape over white silk, two flounces, the upper one looped up with bouquets of white lilacs and chrysanthemums, ornamented with diamonds. Her Majesty's head-dress was formed of a wreath of white lilacs and chrysanthemums ornamented with diamonds. Princess Alice wore a white crape dress over rich glacé silk, trimmed with bugles and white roses. Her Royal Highness wore a wreath of white roses to correspond. The Duchess of Cambridge wore a black glacé silk dress, trimmed with black tulle, and an over skirt of deep black lace. A stomacher, necklace, and earrings of pearls and diamonds. Her Royal Highness's head-dress was composed of a pearl tiara, black feathers, and black lappets. Princess Mary of Cambridge wore a white tulle dress festooned with large bows of mauve ribbon and fringe, and covered with a silver tulle veil. The body to correspond. A stomacher of pearls and diamonds; necklace and earrings, pearls and diamonds. Her Royal Highness wore as a head-dress a wreath of lilies of the valley and mauve velvet leaves, with diamond ornaments. The Princess of Leiningen wore a white tarlatane dress over white silk, trimmed with white convolvulus. Her Royal Highness wore in her hair a wreath of wild convolvulus entwined with diamonds.

Weippert's band of thirty-six musicians, conducted by Mr. John Weippert, was in attendance in the orchestra; and, upon the entrance of her Majesty and the distinguished company, a valse was played.

The festivities were prolonged until nearly two o'clock.

The Earl and Countess of Derby will be honoured with the company of the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary at dinner on the 25th instant.

The Countess Platen left town a few days ago for an absence in Sweden of some weeks.

The Countess Cowley and the Ladies Cowley have arrived at Lord Ebury's residence in Park-street from Paris.

The Earl Manvers is detained at his seat in Nottinghamshire by the serious illness of the Countess, who is in a very precarious state of health.

Viscountess Barrington and the Hon. Misses Barrington have arrived in Cavendish-square, from Paris, for the season.

The visitors at the South Kensington Museum last week amounted to 10,718. On Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday (free days) there were 4417; on Monday and Tuesday (free evenings), 4576; on the three students' days (admission to the public 6d.), 1512; students' evening, 208.

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' ASYLUM.—The thirty-second anniversary festival of this institution was celebrated on Tuesday, at the Crystal Palace, under the presidency of Mr. James Watney, jun. There were 1300 persons present. A report was read, which gave an account of the condition and prospects of the asylum, and stated that there were at the present moment 147 dwellings within the building tenanted by the poorer classes connected with the trade. The Prince Consort had laid the foundation-stone of two new wings to the building, and everything had been done to secure the permanent prosperity of the institution; but there was still a sum of £20,000 required to place it on that footing which it was hoped it would attain. The charity had received considerable support from the chairman of the day, who, with his family and friends, had subscribed no less than £549 to the institution. Before the close of the evening subscriptions were announced amounting to between £3000 and £4000.

AT THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT, on Tuesday, Pullinger, the late cashier of the Union Bank, was placed at the bar to receive sentence. He made a brief statement, to the effect that he had given up to the directors all that he possessed, and that had it not been for the bad faith of a broker with whom he had dealings last year he would have been able to make full restitution. Mr. Baron Channell sentenced him to twenty years' penal servitude, being fourteen years for the first offence of which he was convicted, and six years for the second. The convict is forty-two years of age. Mr. Scrimgeour, the manager of the Union Bank, proved that the defalcations of the prisoner commenced in 1855, and that they amounted to £263,000.——On the same day, Eugenie Plummer, who was convicted of perjury on Monday last, was sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment in Holloway prison, and to two years' subsequent confinement in a Reformatory School. Mr. Baron Channell, in passing sentence, stated that as, judging from the verdict, it was the opinion of the jury that the prisoner had suffered from a defective education, he desired to pass as lenient a sentence as possible. He intimated that her friends had made certain proposals with regard to her which, if accepted by the Home Secretary, would have the effect of remitting the sentence.——On the same day M. and Madame de Welzenstein, Madeleine Jourdan, and Herman Frick, who were on the previous Friday convicted of conspiring to defraud Mr. Stohwasser were sentenced—M. Welzenstein to two years' imprisonment, and the three other prisoners to imprisonment for six months each.——The case of Richardson, secretary of the London Rifle Brigade, is postponed till next session on account of the illness of one of the witnesses.

LITERATURE.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AN ITALIAN REBEL. By G. RICCIARDI. Bradbury and Evans.

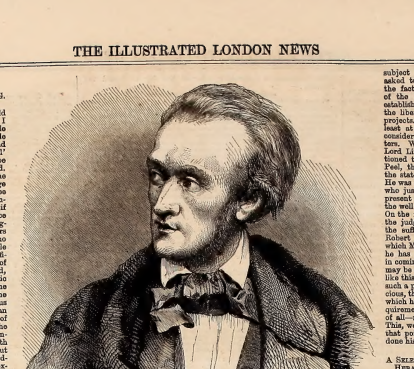
The author of this work in his preface states, "Should any one ask why the title of 'Rebel' is chosen, I answer, that I have adopted it for this very simple reason, that my whole life has been a continual struggle against what the vulgar denominate Authority, and against what I consider Right. To me the word 'rebel' means the brave defender of justice and truth. Woe to the human race were there no 'rebels' in the world. Who could prevent governors from committing the greatest acts of oppression? and who could oblige them occasionally to ameliorate in some slight degree the condition of the people, to whom no voluntary concessions are ever made? If humanity progresses, if liberty, instead of yielding, still makes some advance amongst nations, it is principally owing to the magnanimous efforts of the 'rebels;' and, although torn in a sacred phalanx; and well does each of us who perish in the glorious struggle deserve the noble name of martyr." Accepting, pro hâc vice, this definition, it will probably be allowed that the memoirs of a Neapolitan who belongs to the class here described, is likely to be of interest at a moment when public attention is so fixed on the events now passing in the south of Italy, and especially when the subject of the biography has been continually engaged in the various revolutions of that country. The book contains an interesting picture from the inner personal existence of a Ricciardi, inasmuch as it enables one to consider the effect produced on a man brought up under a Government which seeks, and generally with success, to keep both body and soul in bondage, but whose mind revolted from their authority. In accordance with the maxim that extremes produce extremes, the author of this personal history, having suffered from the tyranny of a despotic monarchy, believes that all monarchies must necessarily be of the same character, and, overlooking or not understanding the advantages of a well-established constitutional government (for even in England he sees around him nothing but aristocratic oppression), he imagines that there can be no happiness but in a pure and unmixed Republic—a delusion that has so often proved the rock on which revolutions have been wrecked—and a doctrine which even Mazzini has now repudiated in reference to Italy. Again, as he has been acquainted with Christianity only as it appears debased by superstition, so he entirely rejects it without examining into what are its effects under a more enlightened form, and proposes, instead of it, a visionary scheme of liberty, equality, and fraternity, of which modern experience has not the futility. With so much qualification it may be asserted that the book and its adventures are well worth notice. The author was the son of Francesco Ricciardi, an advocate, who resided in the village of Capodimonte, about two miles from Naples, and was born in 1808, during the short interval between the departure of Joseph Bonaparte from Naples and the arrival there of Murat. His father, in 1806, was made a Councillor of State, and three years afterwards Minister of Grace and Justice. His recollections, when they assume the importance which entitles them to be recorded in full volume, begin in 1820, the year of the revolution in Italy which had Pepe for its chief. In that year his father was asked by Ferdinand I. to assume once more the office of Minister of Religion and Justice. The subsequent events of 1821 and 1822, and the reactionary policy of the Bourbon Monarch of the two Sicilies, to call it by the very mildest of names, seem to have made a strong impression on the youthful mind of Ricciardi, and the idea of a republic long the best form of government, even as he says, incorporated into his very being, and incorporated for ever. This influence is to be traced all through the relation of his travels, and, in short, through the whole of this volume, which concludes with the commencement of his banishment from his country in 1837, and which is, it seems, to be followed by another work, to be called "Twenty Years of Exile." In summing up opinion on the book it must be understood that it is to be judged and considered from the point of view indicated in the beginning of these observations. As to its literary merits, or its tone generally, there is little to be said.

RIGHT AT LAST, AND OTHER TALES. By the Author of "Mary Barton." Sampson Low and Co.

This is a reprint of a collection of tales which have appeared from time to time in Household Words and All the Year Round; and they are such admirable specimens of Mrs. Gaskell's characteristic powers that we gladly them entitled to the dignity of being made into a book, and rescued from the comparative oblivion which the fugitive nature of their first publication necessarily entailed on them. The first tale is extremely dramatic, though the incidents are simple. The leading idea—that of a visiting medical man suffering constantly from the fault of encountering the last person likely to be launched by middle-class respectability at the son of a forger and convict—is well worked out; while the high faith and unerring affection of his admirable Scotch wife are brought to bear on the interests of his wife with great skill and delicacy. In the "Manchester Marriage" we have several minor sketches, and one especial portraiture of Lancashire character and manners for which the author is peculiarly fitted; and in the latter one she has once more contrived to infuse into the most unpromising materials a vein of romance which raises one of her hard-headed practical men of the manufacturing class into a hero of common life. Of an entirely different class, and breaking entirely new ground, we have in "Lois the Witch" a dark story of early New England superstition. The stern aspect of that singular phase of Puritan life is drawn with great power, and the picture in all the details is remarkable for its contrasts, while the whole is in excellent keeping. In the "Crooked Branch" we are taken into rural life and manners in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and the few and primitive characters of the tale, and the influences under which they act and suffer, are delineated in a way that has been hitherto almost peculiar to some of the Scottish tale-writers, such as Galt, Lockhart, and Wilson, who were much keen anatomists of the characteristics of a cognate class to that which is dealt with in the present volume.

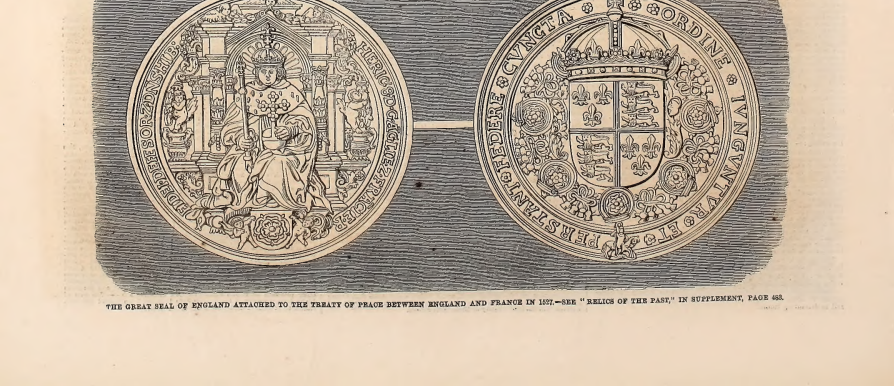
ROBERT OWEN AND HIS SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY. By WILLIAM LUCAS SARGENT. Smith and Elder.

It must not be supposed that the author of this volume comes forward as the sympathetic biographer of Robert Owen, nor even as his panegyrist, and still less as his apologist. He starts by condemning the shallow philosophy of the absence of all moral responsibility which Owen professed; he has nothing in common with his ideas on Communism or Socialism; and he does not spare rebuke on the misdirected efforts of the latter half of his life. All that is sought is to endeavour to prevent the errors and the follies, which were so near akin to insanity, which constituted the useless activity and hopeless ill-success of the second portion of his life from blotting out the recollection of the benevolent achievements of the first part of the career of a man who, rather in spite of himself than of himself, did good service to his kind. In this volume there is a judicious defence of Owen's purity of motives, kindness of disposition, regular personal conduct, universal benevolence, contempt of riches, and unwearied and munificent support of every scheme of philanthropy. The youth of Owen was contemporaneous with the sudden vast extension of the cotton manufacture which occurred at the end of the last century; and he was a vigorous offshoot of that trade, who, wanting in liberal education, created a philosophy of his own and a system with which the present age concedes him—namely, as the founder of cooperative societies, the originator of the doctrine of labour exchange, the pioneer of communistic experiments, and the chief leader of English Socialism. Those who are inclined to look on the subject of this memoir with contemptuous pity are asked to remember him as the earliest reformer of the factory system, as a warm and earnest supporter of the early efforts of Bell and Lancaster in the establishment of their system of teaching, and as the liberal friend of Fulton in his various mechanical projects. It is not uninteresting to learn that at least at some periods of his life Owen possessed considerable personal influence in the highest quarters. We are told that he had frequent access to Lord Liverpool when Prime Minister; and it is mentioned that at one of his visits he was received by Peel, then private secretary to the Premier, and, as the statement goes, with particular marks of respect. He was much liked and respected by the Duke of Kent, who just before his death had arranged to take her present Majesty and her mother to a private visit of the well-known communistic settlement of New Lanark. On the face of it, one would be inclined to question the judgment, and perhaps the propriety, of asking the suffrages of the public for a life of a man, like Robert Owen; but, looking at the point of view from which Mr. Sargent has regarded, and treated in which he has treated his subject, we think we do not err in coming to the conclusion that a record of much value may be drawn from an accurate and impartial memoir like this. The backing of example may be added to such a publication; and certainly, looking to the judicious, the romantic drive, and often coincidentary tone which has been adopted by the biographer, every requirement has been fulfilled, except perhaps the first of all—namely, the necessity of such a life at all. This, we repeat, seems to be questionable; but, given that point, it is not to be denied that the writer has done his work well.



A SELECTION OF ARMS AUTHORISED BY THE LAWS OF HERALDRY. With Annotations by Sir BERNARD BURKE, Ulster King of Arms. Author of "The Peerage and Baronetage," "Visitations of Families," &c. &c. Harrison, Pall-mall.

This is another excellent addition to Sir Bernard Burke's numerous works upon genealogy and heraldry. The arms it contains are only such as the parties have really authorised to bear, and therefore any person who has his armorial ensigns described in this book has a right to them beyond dispute. The heraldic engravings of the work are all very finely executed, and to each engraving is a pedigree and, generally, some descriptive account is attached. The book is both interesting and valuable as an heraldic authority.



The Dental Review for the present month maintains its well-established reputation as the scientific and ethical organ of the dental profession. The editorial articles, as might be expected, are chiefly devoted to the discussion of a question which still agitates the body—viz., the late proceedings of the College of Surgeons with reference to the status of a certificated dentistry, which Mr. Brady, M.P., an independent observer, stigmatises as a seal of degradation upon the receiver. It can scarcely be denied that every certificate sold by the surgeons to the dentists is a certificate of mistrust between the medical and dental professions; and of which Dr. A. Carpenter, who writes in a tone of moderation to the subject, says:—"However the council of the College of Surgeons may flatter themselves that they are able to keep up two or three grades of members, the general body of that college will not go with them, their illiberal and exclusive policy having led to the general alienation of the great mass of general practitioners in this country, who are about to transfer their allegiance to the College of Physicians. Nothing has more tended to bring this alienation than the shortsighted policy of the college in lending themselves to a movement calculated to delay the establishment of a proper Dental College upon a liberal and comprehensive basis."

The execution of the large steel engravings in the Art-Journal for this month strikes us as being singularly marked and bold. The first is from a picture by Greuze, called "Simplicity," in which we think the painter has not been happy; but the engraver, Jeens, has succeeded admirably. The "Omnegnack at Antwerp" (that is, one of the quaint processions, crowded with quaint and even outrageous objects, which are still common in Belgium), is the subject of a painting by Baron Wappers, a distinguished Belgian artist, and until recently President of the Antwerp Academy of Arts. It is engraved with wonderful clearness and smoothness by Lunn. This picture is in the Royal collection of Osborne. The engraving from sculpture is "Ganymede," taken by J. H. Baker, from a group by R. S. Bartholomew.

There is an article in the Englishwoman's Magazine, entitled "Medicine as a Profession for Women," which is well worth perusal and consideration. It is, in fact, a lecture which has been prepared by Elizabeth and Emily Blackwell, the American ladies who have received the formal degree of M.D., and are actually practising members of the medical profession; and it is presented, not as a simple theory, but as the result of practical experience for a period, including study and practice, comprising twenty-two years. The "Two Chapters on Clairvoyance" are both amusing and instructive, the theme being not without its interest in a purely domestic sense.

THE ARRIVAL OF THE FRENCH GENERALS JARMIN AND COLLINEAU AT SEA-POINT HOUSE, CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

FRENCH TROOPS AT CAPE TOWN.

THE arrival of upwards of 6000 French troops in Table Bay, on their way to China, afforded the inhabitants of Cape Town an opportunity of displaying much good feeling and hospitality towards the gallant neighbours of the old country. During their stay Generals Jarmin and Collineau, with their respective staffs, were received at a succession of entertainments given at Government House, and by the principal inhabitants of the colony—one by subscription at the public rooms. The accompanying Sketch represents the arrival of the Generals, under an escort of the Cape Mounted Rifles, at Sea Point House, the residence of Sir William Hodges, Chief Justice of the colony, where a large party were invited to meet the French naval and military officers. Before the departure of the fleet a return ball was given by Baron Jarmin on board his frigate.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1860.

THE time which has elapsed since a notice of motion was given by the Whig Peer who holds the office of Comptroller of the Exchequer, which is directed to the rejection by the House of Lords of the Bill for the Repeal of the Paper Duty, may perhaps have enabled Lord Derby to consider whether this is the exact moment to bring the Upper and Lower Chambers into collision, and to raise the question of the privileges of the Commons of England. It is evident that the Conservative party is trading on the notion that there is no public opinion of any consequence on the subject of Reform in Parliament. It is probably argued that, as people out of doors do not care for amending the constitution of their representative assembly, they must be still more indifferent to anything that relates to the House of Lords. It would not therefore be surprising if the action of the House of Lords became, after all, the spring and source of a loud and imperative demand for Parliamentary Reform in a more comprehensive sense than it has yet assumed, a sense which would embrace the reconstruction of both branches of the Legislature. The tactics of the Conservative party in Parliament as evidenced by the course they have taken—first, with regard to the Church Rates Bill, and now on the Paper Duty Bill, seems to be this: It is not considered desirable, for reasons which are obvious enough, to put the Government into a minority in the Commons, but the plan is to cut down the majorities on liberal measures to such a point as morally, and almost technically, to justify the Lords in rejecting them. It was, no doubt, in pursuance of this policy that Lord Derby, in his hot and impetuous fashion, committed himself to an opposition to the repeal of the Paper Duty.

Without entering into a consideration of the arguments in favour of or against the technical and constitutional right of the House of Lords to reject a bill which does not impose but repeals a tax, it seems to us sufficient to rest the question on the prudence and the advisability of adopting the course proposed. We may, however, say in passing that, when it is recollected that the repeal of the paper duty forms so integral a portion of the financial plan of the Government that a penny in the pound was added to the income tax for the purpose of supplying the exact deficiency created by the abolition of this particular excise duty, it comes to this, that by retaining the duty a tax will actually be levied on the people of the country which will have been imposed not by the House of Commons but by the House of Lords, which, clearly and indisputably, has no power whatever to assess a farthing of revenue on the subjects of this constitutional realm. But, bringing the argument to a finer and more direct point, may we inquire of Lord Derby if he thinks it an eligible thing to bring the House of Lords before public opinion, and to make its proceedings, its principles, its inspirations, and by consequence its constitution, the subject of eager, perhaps angry, discussion? Does he suppose that such a discussion once begun will be easily laid aside or put aside? Is it worth while for any object he may have in view to raise the question whether the Peers are now to assume a share in the government of this country to which it is at least doubtful whether they have a legitimate right, but which by the tacit consent of many years they have not assumed? Does the leader of the Conservative party desire the resignation of the present Ministry; or, if he does not, is he reckoning on the indifference to the votes of the Upper House which of late years Ministers have been supposed to evince? If so, we think we can venture to assure him that he is mistaken. This is not a question of the abolition of church rates; it is not a question of the admission or non-admission of the Jews to Parliament, or any of those more abstract measures with which the Lords have thought themselves at liberty, and have been allowed to think themselves at liberty, to dally with or to reject. This is not merely a question involving an integral part of the policy of the Government which has received the sanction of the House of Commons, but it is a question of taxation, an attempt on the part of the Lords to reimpose by its own mere authority a tax which the representatives of the people have declared shall no longer exist.

Is this, of all others, a subject on which to raise a contest between the two branches of the Legislature? Lord Derby is not unpractised in yielding his policy and unsaying his strongest assertion. He has pursued this course under the responsibilities of office, will he not feel that opposition, too, has its responsibilities? There is a mode by which the Conservative chief can redeem his hasty pledge to the letter, and yet not defeat the Paper Duty Bill, after all. The managers of the votes of his party in the Upper House will easily understand the hint.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The funeral of the late Sir Charles Barry will take place on Tuesday next, at one o'clock p.m., in Westminster Abbey.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL, PADDINGTON.—The ninth annual dinner in aid of the funds of this institution took place on Wednesday evening, at Willis's Rooms. The Hon. George Byng, M.P., presided. The total subscriptions and donations announced were upwards of £1100.

An accident took place on the North London Railway, at Bow, on Wednesday afternoon. The engine of a train from Camden-town went off the line, dragging with it two passenger carriages. Fortunately no lives were lost, though the escape of the passengers, and especially of the stoker and fireman, was marvellous.

IN THE POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION on Monday a public meeting was held for the purpose of furthering the interests of the company which has undertaken the management of that institution. The claims which it possesses to public support were ably set forth by the various speakers; and the financial prospects of the undertaking are said to be encouraging.

PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN.—The council of this society, which was projected nearly twenty years since by the chemists and druggists for the purpose of introducing an efficient system of education and examination for the future members of their body, gave a conversazione at their house in Bloomsbury-square on Tuesday. The rooms, which were crowded, displayed a variety of objects in science and art.

TESTIMONIAL.—Last Saturday Mr. W. Hurlstone, who has been for forty-six years collector to the Inner Temple, was presented with a handsome silver salver, subscribed for by the students of the inn as a mark of their respect and kindly feeling towards him. Mr. Hurlstone has received two other testimonials—viz., a silver goblet from the students in 1851.
